How to Solve the Congested Helicopter Problem at EH Airport

By Dan Rattiner

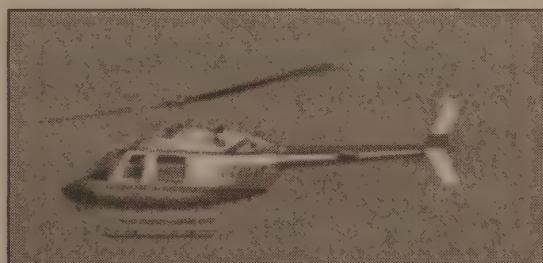

There is a serious problem with helicopters here in the Hamptons. More and more people are using them instead of cars to come out for the weekend from the city. At this point, according to records kept at the East Hampton Airport, there are more helicopters bringing people out than there are regular aircraft. And although there are many regulations about airplanes landing and taking off, about flight patterns and runway use and so forth and so on, there are none about helicopters. Helicopters simply come and land in the designated area, then either take off again or taxi over to a parking area. The situation is both dangerous and noisy.

The problem is most obvious on a Friday night with people coming out from the city, and then again on a Sunday afternoon with people choppering back to the city. That helicopter charter companies charge as much as $500 per person one-way for the half hour trips does not seem to be much of a deterrent.

Probably the single most serious problem involving the helicopters is the long waiting times involved with landing and take off here in East Hampton Airport. As far as take off goes, the control tower requires the choppers to take off in the order that they are ready to leave, and to do this, they have asked the pilots, when they have completed gassing up, boarding and performing their craft checks, to take a number inside the terminal, and then Scotch tape this number to the inside window of the cockpit of the chopper. Then they are supposed to taxi over to one of the staging areas, and with their engines on, just wait there until their numbers are called.

Most of the time, the pilots do go to get the number and then wait their turn, announced to them over a bullhorn, but sometimes, when a helicopter is chartered by an extremely impatient millionaire, no number is taken and the helicopter simply takes off, out of order, creating both anger and confusion.

At the present time, there is nothing anybody can do about this because there is no official rule. But the number of near collisions speaks for itself and pilots and their passengers should be made aware of this in writing, perhaps with a leaflet that is handed out along with the number.

A second thing that could be done is to increase the number of helicopter takeoff pods. At the present time there are three pods operational. The number should be increased to at least six. With more pods, the number of helicopters taking off simultaneously can be increased and the waiting time, currently just under an hour, can be shortened. Perhaps on Friday nights and Sunday afternoons, a sort of control tower annex could be set up on the runway itself, where a town employee, perhaps in a reflective yellow vest, with earphones, those flashlight wavy things, a bull horn and a helmet, could stand on a soap box. People would notice him.

As far as the arriving helicopters are concerned, they have a different problem. Unlike aircraft, which circle the field waiting for the signal to come in and land, the incoming helicopters simply hover, one above the other, and slowly descend as those below them land. This stack has gotten so high on some Friday nights — sometimes a hundred choppers in a stack two miles high — that passengers have gotten short of breath from the altitude and in a few cases, have even have come near to passing out. The Town should require all helicopter charter companies to have those oxygen masks that flip down when the air pressure gets below a certain level. Or at the very least have them in the cockpits for the pilots.

They should also have on board either Tequila, Vodka or Green Ouzo for the passengers to chug straight out of the bottle in case of emergency. Otherwise, sure as shootin', something is going to go wrong somewhere.

The second biggest problem with the helicopters is the noise that they generate. When they take off, for the first fifteen miles, they stay in a long line heading west less than 1000 feet in the air — to get under the flight paths of the incoming planes — and often there are tie-ups in the air in this line for one reason or another. Besides the obvious wastefulness of all the gasoline used as the choppers hover in place, not to mention all the wasted gas they use on the ground — there is the terribly loud noise that they make. The customers pay good money to these charter companies. And, up in the air, sitting in their seats in the back of the helicopters, reading the Wall Street Journal or Forbes or whatever, they are entitled to their peace and quiet.

Choppers

Yet many pilots, even after years of education about this problem, forget to deploy the baffles on board which deflect all the sound downward, so the sound doesn't travel outward, disturbing the passengers in the helicopters both front and back, but simply dissipates into the Wainscott and Sagaponack woods. There have been many complaints by passengers about it being so loud they cannot even think of filing against particular helicopter charter companies — one in particular comes to mind — but for the most part these complaints have fallen on deaf ears.

In any case, something must be done. Perhaps all helicopters flying on the route between Manhattan and East Hampton should be required to have downward sound deflection baffles permanently affixed to their fuselages. Town officials could make up a sticker that they award to each chopper for showing the baffles in place. And this sticker could be affixed in the cockpit windows of the helicopters.

Another idea might be for the town to type up a letter and mail it to all the helicopter charter services, telling them of the tie-ups and urging them to buy larger copters than the ones they are now using. Having larger helicopters would allow the lines to move more quickly to get the people in and out. It would also be more profitable for the companies too. Perhaps they are not fully aware of the delays being caused by the current situation.

Finally, the Town should consider building a twenty-story helicopter parking garage at the airport. There is such a tremendous crowd of helicopters there, having come out on Friday night, just waiting to fly back on Sunday afternoon, and at the present time they are occupying such a large amount of the airport property that there will soon be a very real danger that regular aircraft coming in might be unable to land because of these choppers blocking the runways.

A helicopter parking garage could pay for itself. The helicopter blades can be folded back and the helicopters pushed into waiting elevators to take them up. Or for those in a hurry, the choppers could be flown the few hundred feet from the landing pads to the flat roof of the parking garage where, again, their wings could be folded down to take the elevators down. You could charge a lot more for a sheltered parking garage for the helicopter owners to have their property protected from the environment. Surely you could charge more than the current $1 a day to park on the field.

Yes, there are too many helicopters taking off and landing at East Hampton Airport. But with a little creative thinking, this problem can be solved.

By Dan Rattiner

Last week was the annual HarborFest at Sag Harbor, and besides the oompah band on Long Wharf, the walking tours, the chowder contests, the farmers market by the windmill and the face painting, there was to be a sailboat race in Noyac Bay called the First Annual Sag Harbor Charity Cup Challenge. This was billed as the highlight of the weekend, six beautiful 12-meter racing sloops that at one time or another either competed in or won the America's Cup yacht event, which next year will be defended by the Swiss at Valencia, Spain.

You may have seen the America's Cup on television. It's held every few years. It was last held in 2002 at Auckland, New Zealand, where over a series of weeks, various 70' long sailboats, all specially built for the occasion to exacting rules, came from around the world to compete against one another in head to head competition for the right to challenge the New Zealanders. Entries came from Italy, England, France, Sweden, Spain, the United States, and, improbably, Switzerland, which has no body of water in which to hold these grand yacht races. In the end, the Swiss boat Alinghi prevailed, and then, in four straight races on four straight days, trounced the New Zealand champion New Zealand Magic, sometimes by as much as eight minutes over a course that took approximately three hours to complete.

as a yachtsman was zero, I thought, would just make it more interesting.

Four days and five phone calls later, at 6 o'clock on the Saturday morning of Harborfest, I was in East Hampton staggering across the bedroom trying to locate the alarm clock to turn it off. It was just before dawn. There would be a meeting of the crew of the 12-meter champion "Weatherly" in a private home in downtown Sag Harbor at 8 a.m.

What does one wear to crew a 12-meter yacht? I tried to imagine what I had seen Ted Turner wearing when I saw him on television in the 1970s winning the America's Cup. I tried to imagine what I had seen Dennis Conner wearing when he dominated the sport in the 1980s. Rain slickers? Starched whites with red bandanas? Nothing came to mind. I opted for khaki shorts, long socks and sneakers, a white cotton shirt and straw hat. The straw hat I knew was wrong. But we would be three or four hours on the water, and I wanted to stay out of the sun.

At eight, I arrived at the home of Duncan and Wendy Darrow, a small cottage on a narrow street not far from the Whaling Museum. When I arrived, I found that all but two of the crew were there, sitting around a grand dining room table enjoying bacon and eggs and muffins. Who was there — and they all stood up politely from their break-

I am certain I am not the only man or woman in the world who would like, once in his or her lifetime, to feel what it would be like to crew on one of these yachts during a competition. And so when I heard that some of these yachts would be in Sag Harbor for HarborFest, I got on the phone to make it happen. That my experience fasts to shake my hand hello — were large, brawny, sunburned, athletic looking men and women, some of whom had on Belize Yacht Club shirts or caps with insignias from some yacht race in Norway or Australia. Breakfast continued on for a while — they were eaters — and soon the stragglers arrived. I sat next to Doug Mercer, whose family had actually ordered the Weatherly built for the 1958 races in Newport. He was a graduate of the Merchant Marine Academy in Kings Point and had manned the mainsail during the Weatherly's victory in 1962. He lives in East Hampton.

"I was told there would be no beer allowed on board," someone with a heavy Australian accent said. "But yesterday our Captain got a special dispensation from the race chairman."

A cheer went up at the breakfast table.

An interesting thing happened during the one-mile walk from the Darrow's home to the Sag Harbor Yacht Club where, we were told, the Weatherly was berthed. About halfway there — we were now all wearing identical white shirts with the name of the boat monogrammed on it — we came down a side street to find, coming down the main drag, the grand HarborFest parade marching toward the town center. The lead police car with the flashing light passed. And looking way back down the street behind that car, we could see the various fire departments and Cub Scouts and even a giant Styrofoam whale on wheels that would soon follow.

We stopped for a moment. It would take a long time for the parade to pass. We'd have to wait. Or would we?

"What the hell," somebody said. "We're in uniform. Let's crash the parade."

Behind the police car with the flashing light came the lead car, a Model T Ford with parade chief Paul Sydney waving to the crowd. In the space just behind him, we snuck in.

It worked out fine. At the front of our little group, carrying a large orange life ring between us, were myself and Wendy Darrow. The rest of the crew followed, marching smartly along and waving to the spectators. The band played.

"It took us WEEKS to put together this float!" I shouted out to a woman with two children.

We arrived at the Sag Harbor Yacht Club on Bay Street and found the Weatherly, all 64 feet of her, lined up along the pier with the other five America's Cup yachts we would be racing against. They included: the Columbia, which had won the cup in 1958; Intrepid, which won in 1967 and 1970; the American Eagle, which had been captained by Ted Turner; Heritage, which narrowly lost to Intrepid in 1970; and Nefertiti, which had been favored to win in 1962 but had been defeated by the boat we were on. We climbed aboard. Crews climbed aboard all the other ships, and soon we were underway.

What a parade of boats we made, as we headed out the channel, all six ships, sails up, heading toward the racing grounds accompanied by some of the spectator boats.

As we went through the channel, George

Hill, who at one time owned the Weatherly after its retirement, and now captains it, told us a bit of the history of it. Also as we went through the channel, I strapped bracelets on my wrists called SeaBands which supposedly keep you from getting seasick. In my pocket I had some Dramamine, just in case that didn't work.

"The Weatherly raced against Columbia for the right to defend in 1958," he said. "But it lost. It was too heavy above the waterline. And so, for the 1962 race, everything above the waterline was slimmed down. You'll see the ceiling beams below decks were actually shaved. Everything excess to the racing was removed. They even went so far as to remove every other screw in the decks above the water line. And owner Arthur Ness let up a howl when his pipe rack was removed. But Weatherly won the right to defend, defeating Columbia, then Eastern and the new and supposedly unbeatable boat Nefertiti, built by Ted Wood. Weatherly then defeated Gretel from Australia, which had won the right to challenge."

"Why didn't Nefertiti win?" somebody asked.

"Turned out the water tests for the Nefertiti model were flawed. Nefertiti never did win any of the Cups."

Someone noted the historical fact that the 1962 race was the only one where a sitting President of the United States was in attendance. JFK was in residence in Newport that year.

I met some of the other people on board our boat. There was Gil Meister, a weekend sailor from East Hampton and New York who was an investor in media companies. There was John McKenna who raced J-105s, there was architect and developer John Shanholt of East Hampton, Frances Schultz from Atlanta, George Muhrfeld who heads the sailing club at Devon Yacht Club, Carrie Swift from Sag Harbor who has worked around boats her whole life, David Berridge who has captained several Maxi Boats, Ben Gilligan who is President of Clarin's Fragrance Group and races Olympic class boats, ship's mates Grayson Bryant and Ryan Scott, and the aforementioned Duncan and Wendy Darrow.

About halfway through the channel toward Noyac Bay, where a course was laid out for us, the wind began to pick up. Now we were glid-

Village Hall?

Behind the Rebellion

Sagaponack's Independence Vote Was No Accident

By Dan Rattiner

Someday, when the full story is told, it will be found that the residents of Sagaponack, kicking and screaming, decided last week to form themselves into an Incorporated Village only as a last resort. It would cost them more money on their taxes. It would provide them almost no services other than the ones they already have. It would weaken Southampton Township, of which they had happily been a part for 350 years. And it would further fracture the cohesiveness of the Hamptons.

On Thursday, Dan's Papers heartily endorsed the formation of this village. On Friday the residents of the community went to the two-room Schoolhouse to cast their votes and came out with a landslide victory in favor. The unincorporated section of Southampton Town known as Sagaponack became that town's fifth official village by a margin of more than twenty to one. It was something that had to be done. And so they did it.

What happened? It is fair to say that the Village of Sagaponack came about in order to put a stop to what appeared to many to be baffling and bizarre behavior by three wealthy men who lived down on the ocean. Had they succeeded in what they proposed to do, Sagaponack, along with at least three other communities, would be officially split in two, to become a never ending battle of neighbor versus neighbor. It would have been the worst thing imaginable. Forming a Village of Sagaponack would stop that from happening.

The problems started two years ago when a Southampton Town Councilman named Steve

Sagg Hits the Ground Running

The Village of Sagaponack was less than 24 hours old when a spokesman for that new entity made a request of the Town of Southampton — please hold off on making a decision involving the worker's camp at the Wolffer Estate Vineyard. The Wolffer Estate, which will now be in the Village of Sagaponack rather than just the Town of Southampton, has been working with the town trying to find a way to legitimize the old farm worker's camp which pre-exists zoning and which the Wolffers have renovated and improved upon.

The move to hold off was spearheaded by Bill Tillotson, chairman of the Sagaponack Citizen's Advisory Board, who has circulated a letter he intends to send to the Town to that effect. In it, Tillotson, on behalf of the CAC, said that he and others want to look into the legality of allowing year round living in a camp which had been pre-existing only for summer labor. He also wanted a closer look at what the zoning for the camp might look like so in the future it could not be turned into a motel or boarding house.

In a related matter, Sagaponack "officials" say they want to consider annexing into the new Village about half a dozen small homes on the Southampton Town side of Town Line Road which, for some reason, were allowed to be in the Wainscott School District, and therefore are not officially in the new Sagaponack Village even though they are on the Southampton side of the street. —DR

Halsey, charged with coming up with a proposal to deal with beachfront erosion, returned with a report that basically said if a storm knocks your home on the ocean down, you cannot rebuild it.

This was an internal proposal, a start, one that the five councilmembers would read, amend and adjust, and eventually put out to the citizenry to vote upon. All of the Councilpeople who read Halsey's proposal, who I spoke to at the time, said it seemed draconian. It could never be put out for a vote with that idea in it.

The Town of Southampton covers forty miles from east to west, including oceanfront along almost its entire Southern border. It extends an average of six miles up from the beach to the bay on the north. On the west is Brookhaven Town. On the east is the Town of East Hampton. And the Montauk Highway runs through it, with fancier houses between the Highway and the ocean, and with less fancy houses between the Highway and the bay up north.

For one long stretch of fifteen miles, there are basically five separate unincorporated communities, based on school districts, that extend from the ocean northward three or four miles to end in the woods to the north of the Montauk Highway but not quite to the Bay. These communities are the ancient 350-year-old farming communities of Wainscott, Sagaponack, Bridgehampton, Mecox and Wickapogue. Each has about 1000 residents, with about 100 lucky people rich enough to be able to afford living oceanfront.

The three men on the ocean, angered that the Town was even looking at a proposal that if approved could put their homes physically at risk, decided to simply secede from the Town of Southampton. They would form "Dunehampton," a new Village. It would consist of every oceanfront home in Sagaponack, Bridgehampton, Mecox and Wickapogue, shattering those communities forever. In places, it would be only a few hundred yards from north to south. It would extend along the ocean almost fifteen miles. They would seize their destiny.

It might have been better if those forming "Dunehampton" had taken the time to talk to the Councilmen of Southampton Town. But they didn't. Instead, they filed their incorporation papers. If successful, they would form an entity that would essentially take the icing off the cake, leaving Mecox, Bridgehampton and Sagaponack landlocked and cut off from their traditional oceanfront beaches.

"Dunehampton," following the procedures set up by the State of New York, presented a list to the Supervisor of Southampton Town which had to show, and did show, that there were more than 500 individuals living in "Dunehampton." Unfortunately, there weren't 500 individuals living there, and so the promoters of the village added people who were deceased, houseguests, servants, relatives, friends and service people such as plumbers and gardeners. Essentially, anybody the promoters could think of who had ever set foot in the sacred land that was about to become the Incorporated Village of Dunehampton, made the list. The Supervisor of Southampton Township rejected this list.

At this point, two things happened. The promoters made it known that they would file an application for ANOTHER village that would consist of not only the people living oceanfront, but those living a block or two away from oceanfront. This new Village would be called "Southampton Beach."

The second thing that happened was that the residents of Sagaponack, Mecox, Bridgehampton and Wickapogue also separately met to consider what was going on. They all came up with the same conclusion. If any one of them could apply to become a Village, and do so before "Southampton Beach" did, they would be the next in line for consideration by the Supervisor of Southampton Town. If they could do that and succeed in becoming a Village, they would essentially drive a dagger through the heart of "Dunehampton" or "Southampton Beach" because part of any one of those towns would be beachfront, and then already in an Incorporated Village.

And so that is exactly what has just happened.

Is there any upside to having Incorporated Sagaponack? The proponents of it say that they will mostly be a Village on paper, passing through almost all services such as police, fire, highway and ordinance control to Southampton Town, for which they will contract. But even so there is an upside. The existence of the Village serves as a warning to Southampton Town that if they don't provide reasonable solutions to beachfront erosion problems, Sagaponack would act. It is in the threat of acting, but not doing it, that the upside lies.

And what of the three men? They say that they are glad Sagaponack has been formed, even though it ends their dream. Now the fate of their oceanfront houses are out of the hands of the dreaded Southampton Town officials who even chose to look at the draconian plan put together by one of their numbers.

Through all of this, the Southampton Town Board has considered what they should do about beach erosion. And they have come up with a very good working proposal. Create special tax districts. Throughout the Town, have the oceanfront homeowners pay an extra tax, which would be used only for their homes, in the event of an erosion emergency at the property of any one of them.

This is a great idea. Protecting beachfront homes is a far more expensive proposition than protecting inland homes. Have those who bear the expense pay the majority of the cost. It is surely fair.

As this proposal wends its way toward a vote in the town, one of the three original proponents of "Dunehampton" got up to speak. He is absolutely in favor of the special tax district, he said, but everybody in town, inland or oceanfront, should contribute equally to it.

Go figure.

WHY YOUR PET DOESN'T PLAY TENNIS.

When is THEN?

Trying to Keep From Finding Out Who Won the Tennis Match

By Dan Rattiner

Last Wednesday night, I decided to stay home and watch the much anticipated tennis match between Andre Agassi and James Baker on television. Agassi, I am sure you know, has been and still is a great international champion, though at 35 he seems to have lost some of his edge. As far as Baker is concerned, he is a virtual unknown. Ranked 243rd in the world, he was a former Harvard student who had a promising early career, then almost killed himself diving for a shot. He hit his head on the net post and broke his neck. Then, during his rehab, his father died. And after that he developed Bell's Palsy, an illness triggered by stress that paralyzes one side of your face. When he was finally over all this, he returned to tennis, but his game seemed to be nowhere. Now, suddenly, at the U. S. Open, where he was only able to qualify as a wild card, he was on fire and beating everyone in sight. That he was also movie-star handsome and a 25-year-old black man only helped matters.

I turned on the TV and decided to root for him. It was 10 p.m.

Now this story is not about this tennis match. It is about the perils of time travel. It had been a long day, and during the early stages of the match, I found myself dozing off. I woke up briefly to note that they seemed to be playing about even, with Blake's game just a notch better. But then I woke up again, this time because my girl friend was rubbing the top of my head.

"Bedtime," she said.

"Just a minute," I said. I got up, pressed a few buttons to turn it off and put it on record. I would watch the rest of it in the morning.

Morning came, and I was full of anticipation to watch the match. But first there was breakfast. Now our routine at breakfast is to talk about different things that are going on, perhaps refer to our appointment books about scheduling, and also pick through the New

A COUNTY PLAN TO HIDE TOXIC LANDSCAPING SPRAY

By David Lion Rattiner

We all know that pesticides are not good for the environment because of the chemicals that are in them. We all know that these pesticides get sprayed all over Long Island and sink into the ground water. We also know that we have one of the highest breast cancer rates in the country.

What I bet you didn't know, however, is that there are pesticides on the market that not only zap bugs all the way to mosquito heaven, but also at the same time do not have the harmful chemicals that are linked to cancer and other terrible diseases. Well, there is a County legislator out in Montauk named Jay Schneiderman who does know this and he has been doing everything that he can to keep these chemicals off the ground.

It is scary how much data there is out there about cancer on Long Island and many people suspect that pesticides and fertilizers contribute to Suffolk County's cancer rate. So you would think that anything related to these awful diseases would be taken off the market immediately. But this is not the case. In spite of millions of dollars raised, research found and plenty of protests, there has been no real solution to the alarming breast cancer rate.

Politics is tricky business and you can't just take these products off the market because they have the right to be on the market. There are a lot of things in stores that kill people, but we use them because we want to use them, for better or for worse. Business and jobs are created and it makes life better for a lot of people.

Legislator Jay Schneiderman, however, has authored a bill that is designed to keep these toxic chemicals away from consumers in stores. The bill will make it so that anyone who sells or offers for retail sale any pesticide containing an active ingredient that is declared by

York Times. The Times is a regular at the breakfast table along with the orange juice, coffee, fruit and cereal. There it sat, all folded up.

"Don't look at it," I said, noting that she was looking at the front page. She looked at me, quizzically.

"You can read the front page, but don't go inside. I don't want to know who won the tennis match. I intend to watch it."

She doesn't like to be told what to do. Who does? "If I come across it, I won't tell you," she said, picking it up.

"I'll look away," I said. "Don't look at the Sports Section."

"Perhaps they won't have the coverage of it. It might have gone past press deadline."

"Maybe."

"Ah, here it is. They have it."

"I told you not to tell me."

"I'm not telling you."

"It's still last night as far as I'm concerned. But tell me what else is going on," I said.

"Well, Cheney is finally going to tour New Orleans."

"It's about time."

"And Apple has come out with an Ipod that's also a cell phone. Their stock has gone up. There's a review."

"Any good?"

"It only holds a hundred songs."

"That's not good."

Eventually, she set the newspaper down neatly all folded up — a kindness — so I would not see the sports section. Then we talked some more about this and that, about an upcoming trip to Pennsylvania and about our kids, and then she went to the gym.

I was lingering over coffee. There was a place I had to be about eleven. So there was time to fast forward through toward the end of the tennis match. It could still be last night in Forest Hills.

And then I decided to look at some of the other stories on the front page of the Times. There was one about what caused Arafat's death. (Stroke.) Another about Katrina's effect on American agriculture. One story continued on page A25. Should I go there? Why not. I'll be careful. So I did, without incident. Then I thought — I really ought to have a look at the business section. And I know how to do this. I'll hold the folded New York Times tightly together standing it up, and then peek at the name of the inside sections that they always put in big letters across the top. When I get to BUSINESS, I'll carefully take it out. I started peeking. TheARTS, ThursdaySTYLE. The METRO Section. HOUSE&HOME. Aha. Here's SPORTS. And then just below it, I saw the first word of a headline. The top headline on the front page of the Sports section. I read it in spite of myself. The word was BLAKE.

Well, I intend to watch the tennis match anyway. Chances are that Blake won, but there is a slight possibility that the first word of the headline continues as BLAKE FALTERS... or BLAKE FAILS TO... or even BLAKE COLAPSES.

I give it about a 10% chance.

(PS: the full headline was BLAKE TRIES, BUT A LONG NIGHT BELONGS TO AGASSI.)

106th Air National Guard Rescue Service On the Job in the Gulf

By Dan Rattiner

The only military base in the Hamptons is the 106th Rescue Wing Air National Guard, which is based at Gabreski Airport in Westhampton. One month ago, there was fear that this unit might be on the short list of government bases to be ordered closed. But that turned out not to be the case. In fact, the unit received a rare compliment during the proceedings. The 106th has saved many lives, particularly involving mariners in trouble at sea or in flood waters. For example, in early August, the 106th was mobilized to pick stranded homeowners off rooftops during a flood in North Carolina.

On Monday morning, August 29, Hurricane Katrina slammed across Louisiana, its eye crossing just to the east of New Orleans, and its powerful winds flattening and flooding the coastal areas of Biloxi and Mobile.

It was widely reported that day that New Orleans had been spared the big hit (that was the headline on the New York Times on Tuesday morning), and it wasn't until late that day that the full scope of the disaster began to take shape.

Late in the day on August 30, the Pentagon sent orders to Governor Pataki to mobilize the 106th and several other units and send them to the disaster area as soon as possible. By late

Wednesday, August 31, the 106th was on site, supported by various transportation and equipment units from the 109th Wing from Scotia, N.Y. and beginning to fly two giant HH60 Pavehawk helicopters back and forth over the ruins of New Orleans and the Gulf cities. The crew for the two choppers included 19 members of the 106th Air Crew and 6 para-rescue jumpers. The para-jumpers are capable of rappelling down ropes to devastated areas and are among the most highly trained in the armed forces. Also involved were two of the unit's big C-130 Hercules four propeller refueling planes that you sometimes see lumbering

LOCAL BOY MAKES GOOD IN HOLLYWOOD

By Dan Rattiner

Every thirteen years, it seems, Beau Bauman of Southold does something extraordinary. It's a rule. In 1990, when he was thirteen and growing up in that town, he complained to his mother about something. About being a mother. "You're always telling me what's important in life. Why don't you write a book about it?" His mother replied "Why don't YOU write a book about it?"

As a result of this, Beau Bauman sent a form letter to famous people. 2000 of them. "I am a 13-year-old boy with a sincere curiosity about life. A particular interest which has resulted from this is to hear and study some of the higher thoughts of human expression. My idea is to collect and compile the answers of as many people as possible to the question regarding the most important thing they've learned in life. Because of your experience in life I expect your contribution to be noteworthy. Please respond below. Thank you. Beau Bauman."

To everyone's surprise (except Beau's), responses poured in. He'd go out to the mailbox and retrieve letters from Mother Theresa or Katherine Hepburn or Spike Lee. Another day it would be Jimmy Carter or Billy Joel. "Eat over the Hamptons on training missions. The C-130s were based at Jackson, Mississippi, as were the units from the 109th.

The members of the 106th, all of whom live on the East End, had very little time to say good-bye to their wives and children, less than 24 hours from the time the order to go came down to when they were on site.

Between August 31 and September 9, the unit was involved in literally hundreds of operations, rescuing stranded residents, recovering bodies, transporting injured to the hospitals and bringing in water and food, all by air. From its inception in 1975, historians at the unit have logged 303 official rescues, almost all involving civilian operations. During their six days in the Gulf, they logged 161 more.

Master Sergeant Keith Liming, a jet mechanic at Islip-MacArthur Airport, told reporters that with his crew of six, he had saved 66 people.

"They included two infants, several seniors, two critically wounded people and a dog and a cat. It was horrible to see that kind of destruction not in a combat area."

According to Michael Kurtz of Riverhead, a fulltime helicopter flight engineer at the 106th, many of the people were brought to places not much better than where they had been picked up. They would be picked up off a rooftop or from a telephone pole and brought to a highway overpass or to a triage center, many of them already overwhelmed with the injured, at such places as Louis Armstrong International Airport.

Two days ago, with everybody back in Westhampton, an awards ceremony was held, at which Col. Michael Canders spoke to the 900 members of the unit. It was their regularly scheduled annual awards ceremony.

Kurtz was decorated not only for his work in New Orleans, but also for work he had recently done in Iraq.

"We pulled people into our rescue helicopters from the jaws of death," Col. Canders told the unit. "Some were grateful, most were frightened and dazed at the loss of everything they had."

your vegetables," Spike Lee replied. "Keep cool," wrote Larry Rivers. "In order to survive you must adapt, maneuver, and above all else stay committed," wrote Willie Nelson. In the end, he received more than 200 responses (including one from General Manuel Noriega of Panama in Spanish) and what Beau Bauman compiled became a best selling book.

Now it is 13 years later. In the interim, Beau Bauman has graduated from Southold High School, was selected as one of the two Presidential scholars from the State of New York, went to Yale where he got a degree in American studies in 1999 and then went through The Peter Stark Film Producing Program. Which brings us up to today. Today,

Thursday, a film he produced and co-wrote will have its world premiere in Los Angeles, and tomorrow, distributed by the Rogue Division of Universal, it will open in 1,500 theaters nationwide. Go see Cry Wolf. (It will be in Southampton this weekend.)

How all this happened is a bit of a story. At film school, Beau met a fellow student named Jeff Wadlow, who was studying to be a director. They started making short films together, one of which, The Tower of Babble (narrated by Kevin Spacey; which Bauman co-wrote and produced, and Wadlow directed), qualified them for the Chrysler Million Dollar Film Festival. That's the way they usually work. They write together, then Bauman produces, and Wadlow directs. After surviving seven months of competition and beating out hundreds of other applicants, they ultimately won the top prize — a million-dollar grant to finance their first feature film. The competition was jointly sponsored by Chrysler and Universal Studios.

The Chrysler Million Dollar Film Festival consisted of multiple phases, including the creation of two new short films as well as the development and execution of a feature film script.

The first of the two new shorts had to be made as part of the "Extreme Filmmaking" phase of the competition, which found 10 semi-

Stony Brook Purchase of Southampton Campus Happens 9/20

By Alan Michael Braverman

The most exciting moment in the world of Marine Science on the East End of Long Island occurred this past Saturday, Sept 10, 2005 at the Marine Science Center in Southampton. Coinciding with the news that the agreement for the transfer of the LIU campus at Southampton to Stony Brook was just days away, Stony Brook University held its open house. At this event, they introduced the just-off-campus newly renamed Stony Brook Southampton Marine Science Center. It was the culmination of more than three years of circumlocution by Long Island University to transfer the Marine Science Program. In May of 2002

Long Island University signed an agreement to "Fast Track" its undergraduate marine science program to allow some of its undergraduate marine science students to enter Stony Brook's graduate program early. It was an unusual pairing of a large Private University with a large Public University for the common good of all their respective students. Southampton College's world-renowned marine science program at that point had produced thirty-four Fulbright Scholars. A startling number for a small school, a record that is still unequaled.

Little more than two years later, in June of 2004, Long Island University announced the closing of the undergraduate portion of the Southampton campus and the intended sale of the land and buildings. In November of 2004, all of Southampton's marine science programs and facilities were transferred to Stony Brook University as part of a leased three-year program to allow the graduate students at Stony Brook to make use of Southampton's waterfront facilities, created by Raul Welker the founder of the Southampton College Marine Science program, and others at Southampton, over the last forty years. It also allowed Southampton undergraduate students to transfer seamlessly to Stony Brook and continue their education in the marine sciences. About forty Southampton

preview: the thing about my folks

By Jan Silver

"When the father gives to the son, they both laugh. When the son gives to the father, they both cry." Old Yiddish Proverb

Paul Reiser probably was unaware of this proverb when he started to write a screenplay about his father 20 years ago. "I had a tiny moment of clarity. I didn't know what it was at first, but it soon turned into the idea that Peter Falk should play my father in a film, so I began to write the script." Ever since actor/comedian/musician Reiser gained national recognition as one of the guys hanging out in Barry Levinson's 1982 seminal film Diner, his talent has brought him fame and fortune, marriage and children, best-selling books and the ten-year run of his popular television sitcom Mad About You. Reiser rarely had time to work on his father/son script.

When Mad About You ended, Reiser looked at his father/son script and realized "the son would now be 47, so I thought I should make this thing before we all got too old."

The Thing About My Folks is a buddies-on-the-road movie, but it's a father and son discovering they can be pals. It is also a he said/she said story — the "he" is a grandfather, the "she" is a grandmother, and their adult son gets caught in the middle. The film is also an observant, truthful exploration of intergenerational family love — parents for children, children for parents, siblings for one another, and spouses for each other.

Reiser produced the movie and co-stars as the adult son, Ben Kleinman, trying to deal with his irascible seventy-something father Sam, movingly played by Peter Falk. When Sam's wife Muriel (Olympia Dukakis) leaves him after 47 years of marriage, this causes a family crisis. Ben has three older sisters, played by Ann Dowd, Claire Beckman and marine science students have transferred to Stony Brook and an additional twenty Stony Brook students have enrolled in the Marine Science undergraduate program. This has created an enrollment of about 250 students (both graduate and undergraduate) in the Stony Brook Marine Science Program. In addition, three members of Southampton's professional staff have joined the Stony Brook program.

More than 125 red tee-shirted Stony Brook undergraduates, local politicians including Congressman Tim Bishop, New York State Senator Kenneth P. LaValle, and New York State Assemblyman Fred W. Thiele Jr., Southampton town officials along with former Southampton College President Harry Marmion and numerous enthusiastic Southampton College Alumni toured the newly renamed Marine Science Facility.

Congressman Bishop, Senator LaValle and

Assemblyman Thiele all spoke enthusiastically about the future of education on the East End now that Stony Brook, has opened its doors in Southampton.

Dr. Shirley Strum Kenny, the president of Stony Brook University boarded the "Paumonok," a first class ocean, going vessel that is part of the newly minted Stony Brook Marine Science's fleet and discussed with this reporter "the extraordinary opportunity for our students that this Marine science center provides, Stony Brook. It is the first time it (Stony Brook) has had ocean access, indeed the first time that SUNY has had ocean access for their program. It is a big step for SUNY and a big step for us.

"Yesterday, the Stony Brook local council (the one appointed by the Governor), approved unanimously the purchase of the Southampton Campus by Stony Brook. On the 13th of September the Finance committee of the Board of Trustees of SUNY will meet and if they approve it will then go to the full board of Trustees on Sept 20th. So that we are hoping after that to have SUNY approval to purchase the property (the 82 acre Southampton College Campus). The purchase will be contingent on the approval all up and down the state, the comptroller and the Attorney General, all those approvals. But if they have SUNY's go ahead I think we are in business."

The former President of Southampton College (1972-1979), Dr. Harry Marmion, said that "It was a glorious day filled with hope and joy and the change in the atmosphere was palpable. The upbeat nature of everyone who spoke today, from the politicians to Dr. Kenny, filled everyone here with inspiration and hope for the future. And that is something we have not had a lot of in the past year."

Mimi Lieber, but father Sam turns to son Ben in his moment of need.

Reiser says Sam is based on his father and other men he has observed. "The story is not true but a lot of the conversations are taken from things I remember my father saying." Peter Falk's take: "Sam Kleinman [is] a world-class pain in the ass you could strangle. A man who could be so wrong — a man who in the moment of his greatest happiness brought me to tears." Falk, at 79, makes Sam a still-very-vital life force.

The film begins with Ben (Reiser) talking about his father as the opening credits roll: "The best time I ever had with my father was when he was having maybe the worst time of his life." Ben and his wife Rachel (Elizabeth Perkins) live in Manhattan with their two young daughters. The opening scenes establish Ben and Rachel's loving relationship and their devotion to their daughters. (The women in the story, including Ben's three neurotic sisters, are too sketchily drawn and really just function as cogs in the plot.) Sam takes pride in his son's family. We never learn how he feels about his daughters.

When Ben is to leave the next day to see a farm in upstate New York he is thinking of buying, he and Rachel insist it would be good

Wide Ranging Local Reaction to the Disaster in New Orleans

Compiled by Julia Nasser

Scott Rubenstein, owner of East Hampton Indoor Tennis in Wainscott, held an auction over Labor Day weekend that earned $46,000 for the Red Cross in Mississippi. His efforts were inspired by one of the club's members, Audrey Davis, who had family affected by the disaster.

Two firefighters collected nearly $4000 before the Main Beach fireworks over Labor Day that will be donated to the Red Cross and fire stations in that region. Usually the money goes to the cost of the show.

The "Ocean Road Children" sold lemonade over Labor Day weekend. They challenged their parents to match their earnings. They raised $10,000.

Sag Harbor Police Chief Thomas Fabiano and Chris Denon of Twin Forks Moving orchestrated a relief drive that drove a 48-ft trailer filled with food, clothes and bottled water to Baton Rouge. The trailer drove off Friday afternoon from station's temporary headquarters at Marine Park "filled to the brim" according to an officer. "People are still showing up with armloads of stuff," she remarked.

WLIU public radio station held a pledge drive last Friday (Sept. 9). They have begun to look into ways that jazz musicians affected by the hurricane might be helped. Public Radio stations across the country were granted permission to raise funds for charitable organizations by the Federal Communications Commission.

Bill Berkoski oversaw the loading of over 400 tons of ice into 20 cargo trucks from his huge freezer on Mariner Drive in Southampton that was delivered to Baton Rouge.

Lallie Stationery has designed donation envelopes in the spirit of New Orleans charm pre-addressed to The Red Cross Hurricane Relief Fund that will be shipped without charge. They can be found at Alice B King Fine Stationery & Gifts Inc., on 2454 Main Street in Bridgehampton. Call 631-537-5115 or stop by.

Mangia Media in Water Mill announced that it would make 100,000 pizza boxes with the Red Cross emblem and contact information printed on top. The company also pledged to donate $100 from each advertising campaign it contracts until the end of the year. Terry McCully, of Peconic Beverages, is sending water.

Southampton residents Amy Kane and Penny Lieberman have collected over $5000 for Angel Flight, which provides air transportation in times of crisis. They will soon fly veterinarians down to rescue, treat and find shelter for stranded animals. Officials are herding animals into an area and shooting them to prevent the spreading of disease.

Wolffer Estates Vineyard hosted a benefit party last Friday (9/9) that raised $9000.

Cub Scout Pack 483 in Hampton Bays stood outside King Kullen and collected more than $1800.

Southampton resident Patti Frank, who attended Tulane University, is planning fundraisers to help rebuild lives by providing housing.

Jay-Z and East Hampton resident and Diddy have pledged $1 million to the American Red Cross to help victims of Hurricane Katrina. The two decided to make a joint donation in hopes of inspiring others, to do what they can to help those in need.

At the HarborFest that took place in Sag Harbor last weekend, a raffle was set and 50% of the proceeds were donated to the Red Cross Relief Fund. Also, there was a reading of Steinbeck's Travels with Charley which documents Hurricane Donna as he observed it hitting Sag Harbor at 95 mph winds. The narrative was dramatized by actor/director David Houston at John Jermain Memorial Library on Sunday.

A collection booth was set up at Ashawagh Hall during the opening reception for the art exhibit "Vito Sisti Presents" last Saturday (9/10). In honor of New Orleans celebratory spirit, Mr. Vito's party was decorated with "New Orleans flair" including Mardi Gras beads and costumes.

La Pampa Polo Club, playing a round robin match last weekend (9/9 - 9/11) at the Diamond Ranch in Water Mill, raised $6,761.00.

The Springs Presbyterian Church, accepted donations during their Chicken Barbecue last Saturday evening.

Dan's Papers, located at 2221 Montauk Highway, is accepting checks or cash that will be sent to The Red Cross Relief Fund. We are also collecting items for the backpacks of 21 middle school students evacuees.

The Jewish Center of the Hamptons raised money from tours of the Hamptons Cottages and Gardens Idea House at 113 Lockwood Avenue in Bridgehampton last weekend (9/9 - 9/11).

Wades Beach Blast in Shelter Island took place last Saturday (9/10). Proceeds were dedicated to the New Orleans Musicians Clinic.

Who's Here

By Cindi Cook

Many have watched the horrors of Hurricane Katrina unfold on their television screens and in the newspaper over the past two and a half weeks. But none of us can really understand what it's been like, having only minutes to flee from one's home, grabbing anything possible through an illogical panic-stricken haze. None of us can really imagine the destruction, the desperation, separation, and loss that has taken place in New Orleans.

Only someone who has lived through it can. Tulane students Sherri Heim and Rebecca Hulin are two such people. New Orleans residents — Sherri born and raised in the city, and Rebecca originally from Hope, Arkansas — headed for Amagansett after escaping in their car with their dog Beal and all they could throw in the back-seat before Hurricane Katrina pounded their home on the shores of Lake Catherine, are currently residing on the north shore in Huntington.

They jumped in and kept on driving, all the way to the East End. Their trip north was made possible by the first of many extensions of kindness: A friend Joe Vineis, a New Yorker whom they had met years before in New Orleans, witnessed the flooding and anarchy while away on a business trip last week. He then called the girls on their cell phone, learned that they'd barely escaped their house in 15 minutes, and he urged them to drive north and said they could stay at his vacation home in Amagansett, no questions asked.

Sherri and Rebecca have quite a story. It involves gazing out their back window onto a patch of green that gives way to a dock that stretches into the lake with the horizon behind it. It involves seeing the calm of the water — the cliché but real calm before the storm. It involves gazing out a short time later and seeing each of the boards that comprise that dock fly into the air, the nails unhinged by the fierce wind that had blown in — just like that. It involves a purple sky, and spotting the eye of the storm, ferociously red, just out yonder, as Rebecca says, all changed in the space of one hour. It involves throwing wet clothes just out of the washer into the back of their sedan, because they needed some clothes, and calming their pit bull puppy who was freaking out, and being told by the Coast Guard to get out of their house now.

The two left New Orleans on Sunday, the day before the eye of Hurricane Katrina struck. Sherri said that the storm had first hit Miami then came into the Gulf, but said there were no reports yet of it coming toward them; it was supposed to turn into a tropical storm and descend further south. Instead, as Sherri put it, the storm boiled in the heat of the Gulf for too long, becoming so huge it would have hit them no matter where it went. Saturday night they had gone to work — at a club where they wait tables — fully anticipating having "hurricane parties," a common occurrence in their part of the world. They had been alerted that the storm was a category two, then three, so

The bridge they crossed was shut down an hour after they left. "Everyone's kinda sugar coatin' things," she said, of the media coverage. "It was survival of the fittest down there."

Sherri and Rebecca had started packing a few days ahead of time. But they had not finished. Sherri's dad had come Sunday to board up the windows. They were planning on leaving, but still hadn't packed everything. "We didn't think our house was going to be destroyed,"

Sherri said. "We thought we were coming back."

They did have pictures of their family, Rebecca of her two little girls, and their house, with its large yard, in their community of 700 people, an island community they said was similar to the Hamptons, where people came for the summer. It was a little bit lower class Sherri said; Rebecca explained that the population included Cajun and Creole, many of whom rely on fishing, shrimping, and crabbing, and who've survived in a very rural community. The locals call this island Lake Catherine, situated between Slidell to the north and New Orleans to the south with two bridges connecting it on either side. It's made up of camps, named with sly Southern names like "Too Lazy Camp," "Joe's Crab Camp." There's no gas station, a lot of grills and bars and a few stores. Unless you have a very detailed map of New Orleans, Sherri explained, it wouldn't show up. But everyone knows everyone. "It's a real friendly place," Sherri tells.

On Sunday afternoon, Sherri and Rebecca did their best to navigate through the chaos and get out of the city. At the same time that the mandatory evacuation had set in, the interstate was being shut down by police. "People were almost hitting police, riding over medians," Sherri said. The bridge they crossed was shut down an hour after they left. "Everyone's kinda sugar coatin' things," she also said, of the media coverage. "It was survival of the fittest down there." They made it to Tuscaloosa where they found a hotel with a vacancy. Gas cost them hundreds of dollars on the way, boosted to $5 or $6 dollars a gallon at some stations. Hotels where they stayed tried to charge them double the nightly rate. A woman in Alabama who spied their Louisiana license plates followed them from the freeway to their hotel. When she found out that they were flood victims, she asked if they would mind if she prayed for them, and promptly gave them forty dollars. "We didn't expect to be comforted like that," Sherri said through tears, incredibly moved by the kindness of strangers.

"I was hugging this woman, holding on to her like my own mother."

For five days after they left, Sherri hadn't been able to get through to her family, wondering whether they were dead or alive. She finally spoke to her father, who was in Slidell; he was housing 15 people including her pregnant sister. Rebecca's family was in Hope, well out of the storm, and her little girls were safe with her ex-husband in Baton Rouge.

Last Friday night, the American Red Cross held a benefit at Wolffer Vineyards for those affected by the hurricane, asking for a mere fifty-dollar donation. Sherri and Rebecca had been encouraged by Nicole McElroy and Corrin Arasa of the public relations firm Events East to attend, learning of ing silently along, heeling slightly over. What a magnificent sensation that was.

Also, I realized the truth of why everyone was referring to me as the "embedded" journalist on board. I had really thought I might be able to help out. But I had absolutely no idea what I was doing. So I sort of stood out of the way. People ran around. Other people cranked things. Still other people hoisted things. Sometimes, I'd clamber halfway down the ladder that led below, just my head and shoulders sticking out. I took notes.

"If you can ease a down haul an inch, would that help?"

"In the prestart, we'll get the trav up."

"A little lefty and we're going go fetch."

I would love to be able to say, after the six minute warning horn sounded and all six boats headed toward the start/finish line, that we were pounding along at twenty knots getting drenched by the spray but the truth was that by this point the wind that had sprung up earlier had sprung back down, and now there were just occasional little puffs. The best we could do was about five knots. And it was the same for everybody else.

"There's only one thing more painful than sailing in light air," somebody commented as we glided slowly past some of the spectator boats, "and that is WATCHING people sail in light air."

There were about fifty private yachts in attendance, some with a crowd of ten on deck, others with just one or two, watching these six beautiful yachts jockey for position. There was also a big Shelter Island ferry boat which the Bridgehampton Bank had leased for the day. On board, amidst festive pennants and bunting, we could hear music playing when the wind was right. The six of us, six swans, glided by.

Due to a brilliant move by our captain at the last minute before the gun sounded to start the event, we were first off the line. Then, however, the wind shifted, and two of the boats, one of which was the Intrepid, came up lower than we were but in a better position. For a while, we fought to get our sails ahead of the Intrepid to block her wind, but we couldn't do it. Slowly, Intrepid pulled away — and it occurred to me that since we were both exactly on the same tack under the same circumstances, Intrepid's slight speed advantage was probably the same speed advantage she had enjoyed forty years earlier. In any case, after awhile, our Captain took a gamble and jibed off.

Indeed, the wind changed just after he did that. The crew was jubilant. We were first to the downwind mark, and then we charged home, if you can call two and a half knots a charge. Still, our Captain fought for every advantage.

"Intrepid just got knocked," a mate noted. I figured that out. A gust of wind.

"Is it a header?" the captain asked. I have no idea what that meant.

"Shall we put the dogs in the house?" one of his advisors asked at one point.

I thought that might refer to lunch, but it didn't. It meant everybody go down below and lie on the floor to put as much weight at the bottom of the boat as possible.

"Not necessary," the captain said, declining the suggestion.

Now we were coming up on the start/finish line. It was thirty yards ahead and we were in the lead. I looked back. Each of the other five boats was lined up directly behind us. We were going to win. And then, the wind just plain died.

We sat there like this for maybe twenty minutes. Around us, the spectator boats chugged this way and that trying to get the best view of the finish. Meanwhile, we six sat like statues. I tried a suggestion.

"Why don't we pull the boom back and forth," I suggested from my perch halfway out the hatch. "Sort of wagging the mainsail. It would get us going."

"Against the rules," the captain said.

But I felt I had to do something. I had the shirt. I was part of the crew.

"Speed is oh point oh," I said loudly, reading the digital numbers on the device at the top of the stairs that said how fast we were going. "Still oh point oh."

It sort of freed up the captain from looking at it, having me shout this out. "Still oh point oh."

But the interesting thing was that — and you could see this from things floating on the water alongside the boat — we were inching very slightly toward the start/finish line. How could this be?

"Are there degrees of oh point oh?" I shouted. "Yes," the Captain said.

We continued bearing down on the finish line one inch at a time.

"I have no rudder," the Captain said. "Ease it out just a bit. I want to stay wide. I don't want to hit the mark."

Hitting the finish line buoy was bad, apparently.

"Still oh point oh," I shouted. But now we were ten feet away. Then five.

"The bow is crossing," one of the crew shouted, happily.

"Still oh point..."
BLAM!!!

A cannon shot was fired from the stern of the officials' boat not fifteen feet from us. We all jumped. There was a puff of smoke. All the spectators cheered. We had won.

In spite of the fact we were still moving and no more than a few feet past the marker, we all

For the Cup

danced around happily. People came over to shake the Captain's hand. We were all smiles.

"That was a great decision, deciding to jibe away when we did," one of the crew said to him.

"Your personal puff," somebody else said.

"Aren't we smart," the Captain said.

"And we thought having you on board would be a handicap," somebody said. They were looking at me.

The beer appeared. We sat around savoring the thrill of victory, as it were. And then out came boxes of sandwiches. We whooped and ate, sitting in a big circle in the cockpit or on the deck front and back. Boy, was that food good. Nuts. Red Hot beef jerky, half a dozen different kinds of heroes, all labeled in pencil — Italian, Ham and Cheese, Chicken with Olive Spread, Fred, Sam, Harold.

None of these names matched anybody on board as near as I could tell. I asked about it.

"Duncan bought them," Wendy said. "Some he named for the people who made them."

And so we sailed home back toward Sag Harbor. On the way, I learned that each of the boats had been chartered by a different organization, the money going to charity. One of the boats had on board sailors from a real estate firm. Our boat had many crew members from a cancer care organization called FIGHTING CHANCE, which will sponsor a daylong conference for patients and caregivers in Sag Harbor on November 12 from 9:30 to 4 at the Bay Street Theatre. It is entitled "Coping With Cancer on the East End: A Day of Education and Hope."

Coming into town through the jetties by sea, you could get the full appreciation of what HarborFest was all about. Long Wharf was filled with people. White rowboats were lining up on the sand leading to the water just to the west of it by the windmill for the whaleboat races, and there was the smell of cooked food, the sound of a band serenading and the barking of some orders over a loud speaker inviting people to the whaleboat race.

I had worked helping crew a former America's Cup winner to victory in the First Annual Sag Harbor Charity Cup Challenge, I thought later in the day, as I drove home. I was the knot speed counter. I smiled. Nothing is ever going to take that away from me.

Toxic

the Environmental Protection Agency as a known, suspected or probable carcinogen, neurotoxin, developmental or reproductive toxin or endocrine disrupter would have to place the product in a sealed and locked case or behind the service counter so that only a seller or a store employee can gain access to it.

The bill has not yet been passed. County Executive Steve Levy is reviewing it and will decide on whether or not to veto the bill if it does.

The whole point behind the bill, and it makes a lot of sense, is similar to the idea of not allowing sales of cigarettes to children and keeping them behind the counter.

A lot of people wonder what good will result however. The question turns into, "Well, who cares if it is behind the counter, I can just go up to the counter and have somebody else get it for me."

But the interesting thing is that if these products are behind the counter, they will be used less. The reason behind this is the fact that the alternative products to these harmful pesticides will still be on the shelf where a consumer can gain access to them easily. These products do the same thing as the other pesticides, only they aren't harmful to the people that use them.

The idea is that if you are a consumer and you are in a store and you see that there are the pesticides locked behind a counter because they are dangerous to your health and there are the ones that are sitting on the shelf that are not dangerous to your health, you are going to be more inclined to purchase the pesticides without the dangerous chemicals.

If this bill goes through, it would really be a victory for the health of the county because fewer of these toxic chemicals would get into our air and water. It is dangerous to have these chemicals flying around so much and there is plenty of data about cancer on Long Island that cannot be ignored.

NY State and Suffolk County Government: What's Being Done

Gov. Pataki announced that New York's 64 state universities would offer in-state tuition to students attending colleges and universities in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. He has instructed state school districts to speed preparations to accept school children from Kindergarten through grade 12 using the Federal McKinney-Vento Homeless Education Assistance Act.

New York's Dept. of State agreed to waive penalties for individuals and businesses unable to meet NY tax deadlines as a result of Hurricane Katrina.

Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy announced that the county plans to accept 100 evacuees from the Gulf region. Mr. Levy suggested the county offer a police department airboat, all terrain vehicles, specialized helicopter guidance systems, medical supplies, surplus computers and phones at the Suffolk County Emergency Operations Center to assist the Red Cross. Regarding Education

106th Rescue Wing of the Air National Guard sent 19 air crew members, six parachute jumpers, two HH-60 Pavehawk helicopters and two C-130 Hercules fixed-wing transports to Mississippi to assist search and rescue missions.

Fire Rescue and Emergency Services Commissioner Joe Williams said that many individual volunteer fire departments and ambulance companies have contacted FRES to offer personnel and gear including rubber Zodiac boats. Suffolk will work with FEMA to coordinate the EMS volunteer part of the effort.

The Long Island Volunteer Organizations Active in Disaster is currently working with Hurricane Katrina victims who need food, housing and other assistance in Nassau and Suffolk. They estimate that 200 evacuees from the Gulf Coast are living among us.

The Jewish Federations nationwide (United Jewish Community) will offer direct relief on ground and serve as conduits for distributing funds.

President Morris W. Offit quotes: "This is a humanitarian crisis and just as we responded to the tsunami tragedy, we cannot silently stand by in the wake of such devastation. Our Jewish tradition and the values of caring that guide us call on us to help people in need. Checks can be made payable to UJA-Federation of New York, with Katrina Relief in the memo field. 130 E 59th St. room 1145, New York, NY 10022 or by calling the donor center at 212-836-1880.

for the shell-shocked Sam to accompany Ben. Unbeknownst to both men, this will be a journey of discovery.

Sam ruins Ben's chances of getting the farm, and, as they head back to the city, their conversation becomes more contentious. Old arguments and half-truths are rehashed. Ben gets angry and has a little fender-bender. While waiting for a tow truck, he shows Sam a letter his mother wrote to his father just before Ben's birth. Sam reads it and explodes.

Marooned in a rural area with no car-rental agencies, Sam spots a restored 1940 Ford Deluxe convertible in the car repair yard. His eyes light up and one gets a glimpse of a far younger Sam. He buys the car and off they go, with the top down. They begin to open up to one another. "This is what you do in therapy?" Sam asks Ben.

They have some devilishly good adventures during the next 24 hours, and end up at night in the woods—a pivotal scene where father and son communicate tenderly and effortlessly. When Ben calls home, his sisters have found their mother Muriel in a hospital. She left Sam because she learned she has inoperable cancer and only a short time to live. The family is reunited in scenes which are funny, touching, believable.

The Thing About My Folks is a sweet, quiet film. Father and son learn not to take their wives for granted, and losing a loved one can be slightly eased with the balm of love. The film's dialogue is written in Reiser's low-key, naturalistic style. Camera close-ups register each character's inner turmoil. Although the men are more fully developed characters than the women, Elizabeth Perkins and Olympia Dukakis come across as strong women with rich interior lives.

The film has some key flashback scenes and outdoor scenes, filmed in upstate New York during the fall, are rich with autumnal reds, greens, golds and browns. The Thing About My Folks is directed with gentle sensitivity by Raymond De Felitta.

In a discussion after the screening, Reiser said it is difficult finding a distributor for a non-action film, so he has been taking it to film festivals across the U.S. The audience reaction in New York, California or Kansas is similar—viewers say the personalities and situations depicted are universal.

The Q & A after the screening took place at The Hampton Synagogue, with Rabbi Marc Schneier adding to the discussion: "Children have mixed emotions about their parents. The Torah does not tell us to love our parents—just to honor and revere a parent, even when we are estranged from them. A child usually loves a parent so strongly that the emotion is beyond words."

Reiser noted, "This film is part fantasy piece—wanting to know what my parents were like as young people. Would I have wanted to hang out with them.....?"

He grew up in New York, attended one of the city's elite public high schools (Stuyvesant), and studied music at S.U.N.Y. Binghamton. He lives in California with his wife and two young sons. He speaks Yiddish and has a brilliantly quick, understated wit which serves him well doing stand-up comedy. Speaking to the audience from the synagogue's bima (altar), he quipped. "I'm used to applause—not an aliyah [honor]."

Paul Reiser's friend Ken Sunshine, a member of the Westhampton Beach congregation, arranged for the screening in Westhampton Beach. Gloria and Harvey Kaylie underwrote the evening at Hampton Arts Cinema. The Thing About My Folks opens in major cities on September 16.

Furthermore, the movie is said to be based on the book Vengeance, which has been widely discredited.

The film also stars Robert Duvall, Mary-Louise Parker and Sam Shepard.

Daniel Pollera, whose Adirondack chairs and ocean vistas have graced many a Dan's Papers cover, will have eight paintings in a group show at Chrysalis Gallery in Southampton. The show's opening is this Saturday from 5-8pm at the gallery located at 2 Main Street, Southampton.

* * *

Southampton's Stephen M. Ross, the most active developer in New York City, together with

Steven Roth, chairman of Vornado Realty Trust, are courting Charles and James Dolan, the owners of Madison Square Garden, to build a new Garden across Eighth Avenue as part of their Moynihan Station development. It's a surprise win for the Dolans.

Sometimes Hamptonite Leonardo DiCaprio will star as President Theodore Roosevelt in director Martin Scorsese's new film about his life. TR summered in Montauk back in 1898 with the Rough Riders after the Spanish-American war.

Kimora Lee Simmons of East Hampton stole the show at Fashion Week with her great Baby Phat wear, with a wonderful and wild array of clothes, accessorized by about 500 carats in diamonds—if you add up what all the models were wearing. And, as usual, skin was in.

The Weapons Makers

Two weeks ago I was on the outskirts of Washington D.C., in a town in Virginia called Fredericksburg. I was down there visiting my friend John, who works at the Pentagon. I pretty much get jealous of the fact that he works at the Pentagon daily, so when I get a chance, I visit him to see what his life is all about in the good old South.

I went down just for the weekend, and while I was down there, I was noticing that nearly everyone that I met down there worked for the government in some way. For example, John's roommate works for a weapons company and makes antiballistic weapons. He goes to work everyday and studies missiles that can shoot down other missiles, specifically nuclear missiles, and tries to make them more reliable.

This is a pretty important job if you think about it. After all, if somebody were to fire a nuclear missile at the United States, I would hope that we had at least something that could shoot it down before it got here. I talked to him a little bit about this and as I pressed further he eventually said, what I feel is the ultimate thing that a person can say that works for the government which is, "I can't really talk about that with you." What this translates in my head is, "I could tell you, but then I'd have to kill you."

John was throwing a small house party that night, so I had the opportunity to meet a lot of people that he knew. I was really surprised to find out their professions. I met at least five engineers, all of whom worked on weapons one way or another. I met a guy that works for a contractor that makes and maintains nuclear submarine engines. I met another guy that was valedictorian of his class at Virginia Tech and currently works for a missile contractor. I met an assistant who works at the Pentagon and I even met a graphic designer who makes logos for bracelets and badges at the White House. It was nuts.

I was bouncing around the small party, trying to tell people that I work for a newspaper as they all looked at me like I had three heads.

I felt like they were saying in their minds, "A weapons newspaper?"

I couldn't get used to being around so many; well I guess I'm just going to say it, red state people. I wanted to talk politics and about how terrible the war in Iraq is. I wanted to politely disagree with the policies of President Bush. But I found myself holding back just a tad, mostly because the war that we are running in Iraq is putting food on the tables of these guys.

When you meet people in New York that are just starting out their careers you meet a lot of people that are trying to get into finance, finishing up law school or training to be a police officer. They are in medicine, publishing, advertising, television, hospitality and stuff like that. You never meet a person here that says, "I work for an antiballistic weapons company that is a sub-contractor for the government." It just doesn't happen.

I started thinking about this when I went to bed and really started thinking about it the next day when we went for breakfast at IHOP. I started talking to John about how it seems like everyone down here works for the government. He responded to this by saying, "That's because those are all of the good jobs."

It then occurred to me how big of a business the weapons business is. I then started thinking that a lot of the people in the South are employed by these weapons companies and like it. It makes a lot of sense to vote for war when you are in the business of making weapons. I guess I never realized that so many people make their living that way.

It really seemed like this had an effect on the political views of most people that I met. I think that this is kind of sad, in the same way that it is sad that a person will vote for a President that cuts taxes for the rich when they themselves are the rich.

It seems to me that there are a lot of rich people that are for President Bush, even though they deep down disagree with his policies. Getting the tax breaks is so important that they overlook the war or convince themselves that what we are doing over there makes sense. It is funny because to be honest, I have been able to understand this. However, it still makes me angry because I certainly like to think that if I were a super rich guy, I wouldn't allow tax breaks to cloud my conscience between what is right and what is wrong.

Never before, however, have I been able to understand red state people. I would say to myself, are you that violence happy that you just can't wait to start a war, even if it is based on complete lies? I honestly thought that the red state people were just more violent than me. I don't think that is the case anymore. I think they are trying to get ahead like everybody else and there just happens to be more people in red states that are employed by the government or defense contractors than there are people in blue states. So I guess what I am saying is that all of you rich financier Hamptonites need to hire more people from the South in order for us to get out of Iraq. Okay, I'm kidding here, but it is some food for thought.

September 1, 2005

Dear Mr. Rattiner,

Like most summer residents in the Hamptons, I enjoy your weekly with its lively, funny stories about places, people, events, and history of the East End. Unfortunately, you have veered off into printing your negative views of President Bush and U.S. policy in Iraq.

No one denies your right to voice your opinions on politics and world affairs, particularly in your own paper. But apparently you are not aware that to most of us Bush bashing has become boring beyond belief. We can read about the subject in the New York Times or other Northeastern newspapers at least once a day and twice on Sundays. Your readers would be better served if you stayed with what you do best.

However, you've thrown your two cents into a big dollar publishing pot and have asked us to fold or call. I'm betting you will be dead wrong about Iraq.

As a political independent who has supported candidates from both parties for President (Kennedy and Johnson in the 60s, Reagan and both Bushes in the 1980s and 2000s), I've become increasingly concerned about the slanted newspaper coverage of the war in Iraq. The facts seem stated accurately enough but the follow up stories pose a pattern both appalling and even dangerous.

Within the last twelve months two events were reported in such a way as to send my blood pressure up by forty points. In both instances, Iraqi children – four, six, and eight years old – were eagerly waiting for candy to be given out by U.S. troops when terrorist suicide bombers blew dozens of them into bits. Helpless, innocent Muslim children were targeted by the fanatics we are fighting in Iraq.

Short articles appeared briefly describing the carnage. But there was no outrage! No follow up stories describing tiny arms and legs blasted in all directions. I looked for days to find articles, op-ed pieces, anything in print from the influential newspapers of the East Coast condemning in every possible way such inhuman conduct, calling for greater efforts to destroy the monsters and so forth. There was virtually nothing.

By contrast, every complaint by a captive in an Iraqi jail or at Guantanamo Bay receives front page coverage for months on end. The U.S. is condemned for mistreatment of prisoners (many of whom are probably terrorists who would blow up children in a heartbeat) by an avalanche of news stories with graphic photos yet the child killing terrorists in effect get a free ride! No wonder they think they're winning.

They aren't. To you, Iraq has nothing to do with the war on terrorism. To me, the war in Iraq has everything to do with the war on terrorism. There appears to be a greater concentration of Islamic terrorists in Iraq than anywhere else. They can't hide in jungles

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #366

Campaign Promises

Elections for Shelter Island Town Supervisor will be held this week. All the men running are reputable guys with parallel agendas, just different methods to achieve them. But instead of the usual noble rhetoric, I'd sure love to see some new campaign promises. It doesn't matter so much that they would achieve them, it'd just be fun to see some original stuff like:

If I am elected;

Complimentary coffee and snacks will be served on the ferries!

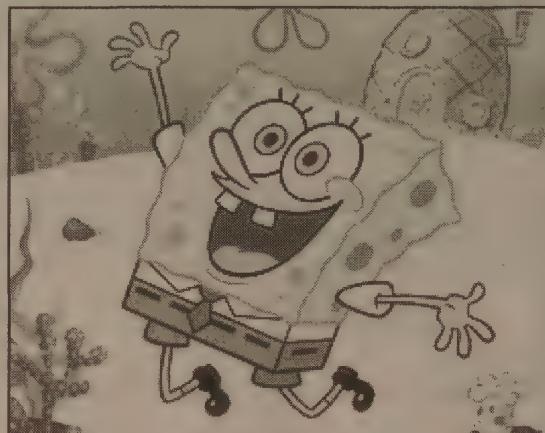

There will be bike lanes on every road! It will no longer be necessary to drive into oncoming traffic to avoid cyclists who never seem to be far enough over on the road.

The carts at George's IGA will be magnetized to auto return to the front of the store when the weight of the last grocery bag is lifted out of the cart!

Gas on the island will not cost more than gas off the island...because we all know that island gas is not special gas. Islander gas is the same as off islander gas.

There will be one English-speaking and one Spanish-speaking counter person at every deli counter on the island at all times so no sandwich orders ever get screwed up.

Flat screen TV's will be erected every 25 feet along both ferry lanes and they will be capable of instantly adjusting to your home remote that you can bring with you in the car. This way, parents don't have to wait until SpongeBob is over to get the kids in the car.

Never mind affordable housing — let's have affordable drinks! It used to be any women looked beautiful after a guy had about $20 worth of drinks in him, now she has to wait for him to hit the $50 mark. It's just not American!

There will be a Chinese Restaurant in that empty restaurant on 114 that will last more than one season even if the town has to subsidize it!

A permanent string of pretty twinkling Christmas lights will be strung along the length of Ram Island Drive on both sides. Not only will it look nice, but no more leaning over to tune the radio and abruptly finding yourself in sand or water.

Enough already with these stupid osprey! Their nests are a total embarrassment to birds the world over. The town puts up platforms, the osprey drop a tangled mess of sticks on top of it and call it a nest. If they can't make something neater than that, then they must be abandoned as the official island mascot. The island titmouse bird can take the osprey's place. Why the titmouse? Because it's cute and has a funny name. It's ten times more marketable than the name osprey for selling tee shirts and coffee cups. Let 2006 be the year of the titmouse!

There will be a drive-through window at the pharmacy!

More parking at the Heights Post Office! "You are here" maps will be posted all over the island for lost tourists. The maps will be the special 'tourist edition' and not list all the roads on the island, only the ones we want them on...

Make your ride count — let there be fishing off the ferry! It's an island fact that fresh fish is as good as a bouquet of flowers for men arriving home too late. Just remember, a bass will save your ass.

There will be a movie theater on Shelter Island! Today a movie costs a family of four $83.00 ($14 for round trip ferry, $7 for gas to and from Mattituck, $34 for 4 tickets, $28 for drinks and popcorn). The side of the school will be painted white for viewing. Bring your own seats, finalists casting, shooting, editing, and premiering a film — all within 10 days during the Cannes International Film Festival. In addition, the Chrysler Crossfire and/or PT Cruiser Convertible cars had to make appearances in each short. The duo's finished project, Manual Labor, landed them among the 5 finalists who immediately entered a summer-long "boot camp" monitored by film industry mentors.

While finishing the screenplay, they had to fashion a pitch with materials for their movie, including casting ideas and a poster. They also had to shoot a presentation piece for the proposed film, featuring dialogue and scenes from the first draft of the script (which was initially titled Living the Lie, and starred Topher Grace and Estella Warren). At the Toronto Film Festival, Jeff pitched the idea, and presented their shorts to a panel of judges, who ultimately decided that Cry Wolf (aka Living the Lie), a horror film about high school kids, was the movie they wanted to see made.

The honor received by Jeff Wadlow, who, at the presentation as director (and co-writer with Bauman) said "This was a dream come true for me and my production partner, Beau Bauman."

Since that time three years ago, Living the Lie has transformed into CRY WOLF. Same plot line, small budget, but with big time actors, including Jared Padalecki, Lindy Booth and Jon Bon Jovi. It has been branded by Chrysler, distributed by Universal, and it is rated PG-13 (for violence, terror, disturbing images and language, sexuality and brief drug references.) It has also been made into a video game by AOL, based on an idea by Bauman, which you can play online by visiting www.crywolgame.com.

I guess that's the sort of thing a producer puts together.

There is a whole world of people who just love to be scared to death by an excellent movie involving teenagers doing bad things and getting knocked off, who are anxiously waiting for CRY WOLF. I know this because I read a whole series of threads on the Internet from people predicting this would be terrific or terrible. "Anything with (name of actor) in it is terrible," one of them wrote. "I love to be terrified. I can't wait," another wrote.

Interested? Go see it for yourself.

Interestingly, I learned all about this only three days ago, when Bonnie Bauman called to tell me of her son's latest accomplishments. He seems to have learned a lot about life. And I suspect we will not have to wait 13 years for his next accomplishment.

Sheltered (continued from previous page)

drinks and eats. There will be one showing at 8 p.m., all proceeds to the school.

There will be a ten second time limit for men in trucks, talking across opposing lanes, to finish their conversations instead of holding up tens of cars behind them while we listen to, "F— no, he said you got 'em..."

In winter, Goat Hill will have designated lanes for snow fun. There will be a 'Bunny Lane' for the little kids and beginners, a "Hey! Watch this!" lane for teenagers with a First Aid Station at the bottom, and a "Kamikaze" lane where anything goes. This will end the problem of toddlers and elderly being embedded in the snow and used for moguls.

In winter, all the bars and restaurants will have to offer gourmet hot mocha on their menus. Not the watery mix stuff, but a really delicious hot chocolate and coffee mixture that will stay warm in the cup for the length of a ferry wait.

The ferries will erect ticket booths where a ferry worker can give you your ticket without having to stand in the pouring rain, or the freezing wind, or the blistering heat. (I don't know what ferry workers are paid, but it ain't enough. P.S. Bridg and Mark, if you get a ticket booth because of this, you owe me $2, and I want it passed to me discreetly in small, unmarked bills).

Shooting a line cutter will be a misdemeanor offense!

We will fix the crooked tower!

The tennis courts on the Heights will be moved somewhere else, so that you have a clear view when you get off the north ferry to see how long the oncoming line is, without having to look through moving people and balls and rackets!

Now these are campaign promises that matter!

(Vietnam); they can't crawl into caves (Afghanistan). We've already killed thousands of them (although you won't find much about this in U.S. newspapers, only the daily count of our casualties) and we will destroy thousands more as the Iraqi military and police become better trained and equipped.

After many mistakes, the U.S. military is becoming more skilled in this type of warfare. Iraqi and U.S. forces should be able to secure most of the more volatile areas, forcing the terrorists into less friendly territory where they can be shot down like the rabid animals they are. In the cities of Europe and Britain it is much more difficult to find them and root them out.

The people of Iraq have shown remarkable courage and resilience. Despite daily terrorist attacks, they have held an election, adopted a constitution, re-opened schools, staffed hospitals and have gone ahead with their lives as best they can. Ayatollah Sistani, the senior Muslim cleric, has denounced Islamic fanatics and has consistently worked for a freely elected government – not a democracy like ours but one which should eventually be effective within the Iraqi culture.

Doomsayers in the U.S. will cry "civil war" if the Sunnis continue to reject the new constitution. If this happens, so be it. To preserve our Republic, we suffered through a bloodier conflict than any Iraqi civil war could ever be.

Sunnis who have and may join the terrorists will get what all terrorists deserve. No society will tolerate the slaughter of its children indefinitely.

Once the "grisly gang" of Saudi, Egyptian and Iraqi murderers have themselves been exterminated, the reign of terror in the Middle East should decline. Iran will get the message, finally. Syria already has. Then, would be terrorists in London, Madrid and other cities will think twice before blowing themselves up in the name of jihad, a hopeless cause.

The odds are good that this will happen. As I said, I'm betting on it.

their presence here through the Red Cross, a client of theirs. There they were introduced to many members of the community. Sherri, petite and very polite, and Rebecca, taller, with her hair pulled back to reveal her delicate face, seemed slightly overwhelmed with the swarm of people around them all talking at once, and all offering assistance, jobs, anything they needed. Here they were in a strange new place on the other end of the country. Where would they stay and, if so, how and where would they work?

Sherri and Rebecca have received assistance from the Red Cross, in the form of monetary payments as well as temporary housing, now in Huntington. The initial payment, though, will only tide them over for a short time. Friends who sought shelter with their families or other friends locally after losing their own homes have offered to send money by wire transfer, but they're reluctant to take it unless absolutely necessary. They've filed applications for aid through FEMA online and called the offices incessantly but have only gotten recordings. Rebecca said at times she still feels like she's in the eye of the hurricane. Sherri left her wallet behind, with her Social Security card in it. Rebecca has hers, but not her driver's license. She left that in a pant's pocket somewhere in her room.

For now, they plan to establish their lives here and are surprisingly upbeat about what lies ahead. As a budding designer, Sherri anticipates exploring all that New York City has to offer; as a Tulane Med Student, Rebecca plans to pursue avenues that will further her career. They both concluded that they would go back to New Orleans, professing their love for a great city with great people — but that they wanted to be protected and feel secure. These former roommates had survived the storm and wouldn't let it daunt their spirit. "I don't know what I would do without Sherri," Rebecca said.

Riverhead's Racers

Race Car Drivers At The Riverhead Raceway Describe What It's Like Being A Racer

By Ian Squires

Jim and Barbara Cromarty bought Riverhead Raceway in 1984 but "neither one of us had ever been to an auto race in our lives before we started operating the track," says Jim. The pair became quick diehard fans, both citing family friendly attitudes at the racetrack as the top reason.

"Something you see in stock car racing," says Barbara, "that you don't see in any other sport, is that when the show is over the fans can come down into the pits. The kids come, they talk to the drivers, get their autographs, it's a fun thing to do." Racing has had so much success in this country, Jim adds simply, "Because it's a form of family entertainment and it's exciting."

Half a century ago, Riverhead had one of 40 racetracks on Long Island. But when Freeport Stadium closed its gates in 1986, Riverhead Raceway became the sole NASCAR track in the entire New York City Metropolitan area.

Driver Roger Oxee has been racing Riverhead since 1979. He says racing is no different from any other popular sport from a fan's point of view, "It's like with baseball and having your favorite team. In racing you have your favorite driver."

When Roger first started racing, he bought an old race car that he says was sitting out in a field just getting old. With the help of his neighbor, he fixed it up. "I got myself a junkyard motor and at first I was convinced I was the hottest thing on wheels. I found out very quickly that I didn't know what I was doing or what I had gotten myself into."

But once you start racing, Oxee says, you're hooked. "People try to get out, they leave and say they're never coming back, but they do. Once you face it, you're in it for life because you enjoy it so much."

He says he drives for the same reason as every other Saturday night racer, "The ability to take that checkered flag, drive around and know you've accomplished something is why I do it. It's like any other competition. You do it for the feeling you get on that one night you know you've bested all the guys you're up against."

There's camaraderie among the racers, but once you're on the racetrack nobodies your friend according to Oxee.

"A guy you're friendly with now, later on might not be talking to you or you might be in each other's face. But you know what, in the end it's a big family. Whether you're friendly or not, it is a family, and I could be spending my money on a lot worse things."

To be sure, it isn't the prize money that sucks people in. Douglas Wholey is an excavator five or six days a week and works so he can be a race car driver on Saturday. "You get $550 for winning a race," he says,

If you want to be competitive here at Riverhead Raceway, it'll cost you between $15,000 and $20,000 a year according to Wholey. If you break it all down, the cost of the car, the tires, the fuel, the wrecks, racing can cost a driver anywhere from $12 to $15 a lap.

Without money, Wholey says, you don't have much in this sport. "Guys that don't have good cars don't because they don't have enough money to go fast. Money makes you go fast."

Wholey says he races because he's an American. "You know how people love the American dream and Americans love cars? It's just another step, now you get to race them competitively on your own circuit. It's also a lot of fun being in the pits with your friends, helping each other. It's kind of like an extended family."

Dan Tarbush has been a mailman for 35 years, almost as long as he has been a race car driver where he's picked up 63 wins in his career. He's retiring from his day job at the end of the year, and retired from racing about six hours after he spoke with me.

At this time next year Tarbush expects to be gone. "The car is sold and after tonight's race is over, the guy takes it. I'm gonna go to Florida and enjoy life. Saturday nights we live life to the fullest, and we're gonna miss this part here. It's a friendly atmosphere but it's time. I probably could still do it for five more years, but it's time."

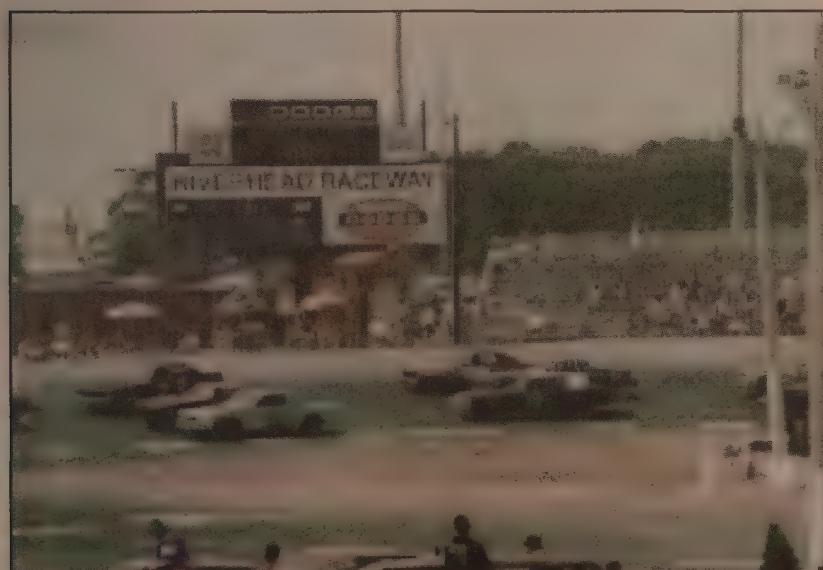

His son is in his third year racing and Dan says he doesn't want to take any of his son's fame. "My son is in his third year and I feel very comfortable that he can fill my shoes. He's just as good as me and can keep the family name in the papers for a long time. It's his turn."

The 2005 racing season comes to a close September 24th with the final Saturday night races of the year at the Riverhead Raceway, but Roger Oxee says the season actually lasts all year long. "All winter long you're rebuilding these things from the ground up, getting them ready, improving them. You do everything, nothing stays the same. It's a 52 weeks of the year obsession. I work a normal job to be able to race. Racing's my passion."

When Roger first started racing, he bought an old race car that he says was sitting out in a field just getting old

"tires alone are $500 per night." And if you think you've been paying a lot at the pump, be glad your car doesn't take racing fuel like these guys use, running about $9 a gallon.

Photographer, Ken Rubino

By R.B. Stuart

Ken Rubino graced the cover of Dan's Papers in 1992 with a photograph of Westhampton Beach, shooting the photo for painter Liz Duerschmidt, who donned the cover. Rubino began photography 20 years ago when he hurt his back and could no longer do construction. He went back to college in 1986 to complete his art and education classes, thus beginning his second career. "I realized that I always had an interest in creating and have always had an eye for detail," Ken Rubino recalled.

Rubino was born in Nassau County and attended private Catholic schools until the fifth grade, when his family moved to Brentwood. He has one brother and one sister, neither of whom became artists, but his Dad was a photographer, "And he was always taking pictures," Rubino remembered.

Rubino moved to Baiting Hollow in 1988 and began taking art classes at Suffolk Community College and Southampton College for creative writing, photography and education. He later earned his Masters at C. W. Post for photography.

"Seeing the photo before you snap the shutter is what I love about it the most," Rubino explained. "You can be driving down the road and see an image out of the corner of your eye and you know it will become a wonderful photograph." The biggest challenge though, "Is coming up with something unique. Developing a unique vision," he conceded.

He told me about where he gets his inspiration from by saying, "The sheer joy of making a wonderful photograph inspires me. It's rewarding when someone else appreciates and shares the vision I've created," he said.

"I've been able to shoot aerial photography and I love it. In 1997 when I had assignments with Off Shore (a national boating magazine) is when my dreams in some respect were realized. I moved to other things after that. Now, I'm passionate about life and creating new challenges for myself," Rubino shares.

Rubino is now 54 and is the president of the East End Photographers Group. In hindsight if he could change one thing he says, "I would have become a photographer at an earlier age. I was offered two scholarships, one from the English department and another from the Art department and I accepted the English scholarship. It would have been interesting to see how things would have turned out if I accepted the art scholarship," he reflected. He graduated with a BA in Creative Writing.

Rubino went on to teach photography at the East End Arts Council in Riverhead. In the six years he's been there, 100 students have come and gone, out of that maybe a dozen were serious hobbyists. "One private student of mine made me very happy and proud. He was a 12 year-old boy whose goal was to attend the Ross School in East Hampton. Not only was he accepted into the Ross School, but on a scholarship, which is extremely difficult. At 12 he was very serious about learning photography and extremely intelligent, but a 12 year-old kid at heart," he gleamed.

When asked how digital has changed photography Rubino replied, "Digital photography has made taking pictures more accessible to more people. It made it somewhat easier for the snap-shooter to get proper exposure. As far as my photography, it actually has inspired me to take a step backwards by using a 1907 (8 X 10) view camera. I know that I can still get a better fine art photo from film and chemicals than anyone can using a digital camera and printer. Digital photography has made photography easier but not better," he pointed out.

In 10 years, "I hope to still be creating wonderful landscapes and seascapes," Rubino concludes.

Rubino also works on assignment, his portfolio consists of portraiture, aerial shots of homes, editorial and product. His work can be seen in Mattituck at Love Lane Photo, 12830 Main Rd. The number there is 631-298-0070. Also in Southampton at the Parrish Art Museum, September 25–October 23 (opening is September 24 at 5: pm – 7: pm) on 25 Job's Lane. Their phone number is 631-283-2118 and in East Hampton, September 24 – 26 at Ashawagh Hall on Old Stone Highway. Their number is 516-381-2388. You can also see his pictures at www.lovelanefoto.com.

Have a Merry Time at the Maritime Festival

By Krystle Howell

Hey, I have a question for everybody? What are you going to be doing next weekend? If the answer is "I don't know," then I might have an answer for you. If you are looking for great scenery, live music, parades, races, contests, big boats, and shopping, then I definitely have the perfect place for you. If there is anyone that is looking for a good time, Greenport is the place to be.

From September 23 to the 25, Greenport is having its fifteenth annual Maritime Festival. This three-day festival starts at 6 p.m. with a land and sea cocktail reception. There is going to be great food, drinks, and amazing company that night and this wonderful party will last until 8 p.m. If you're still looking for a good time after that there is always fun to be had the next day.

On the twenty-fourth, the festival will kick off at 11 a.m. when vendors open up shop and the roaming musicians begin to play. Besides the vendors, the Village Blacksmith will be open along with both the Rail Road and Maritime Museum. So take in a little bit of history while you are there. Then, at noon, the parade will begin and you can gather in the streets to see the creativity of those who made floats. One of the floats to be shown will be a giant cake made by the Eastern Long Island Hospital employees for the hospitals 100th anniversary. The float was not a piece of cake to make. Eileen Solomon, who is the coordinator of the Eastern Long Island Hospital and in charge of public relations stated, "It took a lot of hard work. We are very proud of it. This is very important. It's the last time to show it off for the year."

It may be the last time the float will be seen, but it's not the last event of the day.

At one o'clock, there will be old-fashioned games; a treasure chest, traditional arts and craft demonstrations, pirate shows, and Captain Kidd's Alley will open up. Set sail with the captain through the great world of imagination and see what it was like to truly be a pirate. The Peconic Radio Club will also be there at 1 p.m., and all of these events will be going on until 4 p.m. Meanwhile, at 2 p.m., show up for the Kayak Derby, which will take off for a wild race. At 3 p.m. the band Spindrift will begin to liven the party up. Cranking it up another notch, another live band will begin at five-called Jazz Alive, hopefully keeping jazz alive for one more night. Finally, the night will come to a close with a sad, but booming finish at 7 p.m. with the Big Band East, which will be playing until 10 p.m. People will definitely be getting their groove on. If you are still not tired from the rocking events of Saturday and are still looking for another great day of fun, Sunday will allow you to continue having a blast.

On Sunday, the festival will continue with all the same exciting activities as the day before, but will continue with even more. At noon, go seaward to watch the whaleboat race. At 1 p.m., put your grumbling belly to the test and chow down with the chowder contest where you can eat New England Clam Chowder until you can't take it anymore! Children better be ready to snap into place at 1 p.m. and head on over to the Kid's Snapper Fishing Contest. Enjoy all these activities while listening to the sounds of another great band called Dunegrass. If all that isn't enough, at 3:30 p.m. the Festival Raffle Drawing will be held and at four the Eastern Long Island Hospital will be back kicking off their twenty-fifth Dream Green Drawing at Mitchell Park. And don't forget to reel yourself in to check out all the great ships that will be docked.

The H.M.S. Bounty, Kings Pointer and the Amistad will be in Greenport for the festival along with other great boats, such as the schooner The Lady Stirling. If you want you can set sail and take a ride on one these boats. I promise the scenery will be amazing and well worth it. With all the great things to see and do, don't forget to eat because there are many great restaurants on the water too. So wine and dine and just have fun. I'll see you there.

OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

Vineyard 48's First New Wines From Old Vines

I first introduced you to Vineyard 48 in early May when they released their first wines under the Vineyard 48 label. Even though Italian-born Rose Pipia and her son Joseph Pipia had taken over the old Bidwell Winery in Cutchogue a year before that, the wines were really old Bidwell stock that was tweaked by winemaker Mathew Berenz and winemaking consultant Roman Roth of Wolff Estate. While most of the releases were palatable, the ten-dollar red table blend was probably my favorite.

Everyone at Vineyard 48 told me at the time "Just wait for the 2004 releases, they're going to be great." And, with a quality winemaking team, the Island's second oldest vines and Steve Mudd of Mudd Vineyards on board to help get them healthy again, I had similarly high hopes myself.

Last week, Vineyard 48 dropped off samples of four 2004 whites — two different Rieslings, a Sauvignon Blanc and a Chardonnay. These wines have yet to be released (but they will be soon) and the bottles were labeled only with Post-It notes.

I started with the Vineyard 48 2004 Riesling ($16), chilled only moderately, the way I think everyone should drink Riesling. 2004 wasn't a great growing year for high-acidity whites and this wine shows it. Its austere nose offers faint pear and apple aromas but is a little flat. With fairly low acidity, it's good that this wine was fermented to dryness, resulting in a gulpable white that does have some good apple and pear flavors. This is still a young wine that may have been suffering from a bit of bottle shock. At $16, I hope it opens up a bit.

Next I tried Vineyard 48's 2004 Semi-Dry Riesling ($18), which undoubtedly was made with the vineyard's best lots of Riesling. Much more aromatic, it offers a similar fruit profile but also brings some floral and flinty aromas to the glass. The little residual sugar in this wine is balanced nicely by impressive acidity, making it nearly imperceptible. Light-bodied, clean and delightful, this was my favorite of the lot. Quality Riesling goes great with the diverse dishes of Thanksgiving dinner...and I think this one may make its way onto my table this year. Spend the extra two dollars and buy this bottling. It's a much better value.

The Vineyard 48 2004 Sauvignon Blanc ($15) is still a little young and tight as well, with a restrained, citrusy nose with wisps of grassiness. Medium bodied and fresh, it has nice but not overpowering acidity with simple, but appetizing citrus flavors. Sauvignon Blanc is one white that I prefer a bit cooler, so don't be afraid to keep this one in your refrigerator for an hour or so before serving with local shellfish or light, flaking white fish.

Dan's North Fork

The last of the samples, Vineyard 48 2004 Chardonnay ($30), stands out from this group both because of its price and its considerable oak influence. Medium-light gold in the glass, its young nose is ruled by sweet oak aromas and with only a little roasted apple buried underneath. This Chardonnay is full-bodied and tongue coating, with oak-infused flavors like sweet vanilla and toasted coconut dominating the palate. Because of a sprinkling of acidity, it's not flabby like many heavily oaked wines, but it's not balanced at this young age either. This wine has potential, but as it's drinking now, I don't think it's worthy of a $30 price tag.

Vineyard 48 has become a popular destination on Route 48, offering live music most weekends. For more information, call 734-5200. These wines will be released soon, so go check them out for yourself. Me...I'll stick with the semi-dry Riesling for now.

Dan's North Fork

John Wittmeier, who with his brother Otto owns the Modern Snack Bar, would fully agree that it is neither "Modern" nor a "Snack Bar." This is a real piece of Long Island culinary history that has been in their family since the 1950s. The décor is still reminiscent of those days and together with some exceptional food, is the reason why it is as much a destination for visitors to the North Fork as any of the wineries or golf courses. This is also a place where regular customers abound and where they almost count the long winter days when the restaurant is closed until it's reopening in the spring.

The menu offers something for all tastes from home made soups to burgers and sandwiches and a great selection of salads, including a raved about lobster salad. The restaurant also specializes in seafood and

"all time favorites" so we concentrated on those, plus some of the interesting appetizers they offer.

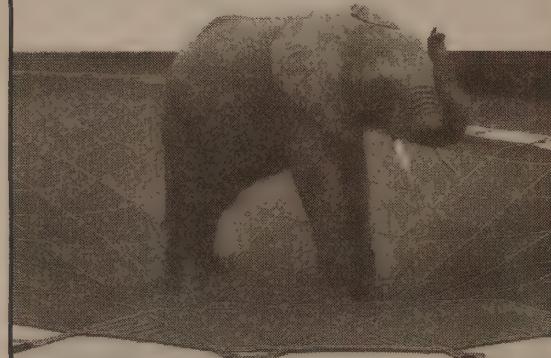

Bar-B-Que pork wings are mini pork shanks and these literally fell off the bone. They were meaty, full of flavor with a great sauce which did not swamp them and we both agreed that they were incomparably better than ribs we had eaten in a very well known barbecue place in Manhattan a few weeks ago. Among the daily specials was stuffed cabbage. Now this can be tough and strong but here the cabbage melted in your mouth and the filling of meat and rice was perfect with a tomato-based sauce bringing all the tastes together and making a great dish from these simple ingredients. That is probably what the Wittmeier family has done here over the years. They have shown that using simple, but very fresh ingredients, and preparing and cooking them with care and attention, can make old fashioned dishes such as stuffed cabbage, chicken croquettes and meat loaf the reason why this restaurant continues to flourish after over fifty years.

The Modern Snack Bar has also received regular rave reviews for their soft shell crabs. We soon realized why. Again, no fuss no trimmings, just a beautifully fresh, plump crab from Maryland, lightly fried to perfection and served with some crisp salad greens. Absolutely delectable!

From the all time favorites, that John said he would change at his peril, we chose the Old Fashioned Sauerbraten. This again was just as it should be. Thick tender slices of meat that had absorbed the flavor of the marinade. With it came red cabbage that added the mix of sweet and sour to bring the meat tastes out even more. It also came with some potato dumplings that were wonderful. The beauty of the dish was that it was in no way heavy and it really was a perfect dish for a crisp late summer evening. We also ate one of the lunch specials, a chicken potpie, (one of my favorite dishes), that was full of meat and mixed vegetables and tasted exactly as it should and, at $7.45 at lunchtime is an absolute bargain.

Desserts are important here, especially when you consider that they close for two weeks before Thanksgiving to prepare some 1500 pies in ten different varieties for sale the three days before the holiday. We chose a peach pie that had a rich crust and fresh fruit filling. We also had one of John's specialties, Grasshopper pie, which turned out to be a refreshing, frozen mix of marshmallow fluff, heavy cream and crème de menthe in an Oreo crust.

Wines here come from local wineries and from other parts of the world. Wines by the glass start at $5.65 and by the bottle there are excellent choices in the $20 range. They also offer an intriguing range of classic cocktails and some fancy Martinis, which at $6.95 are not over priced by any stretch of the imagination. Indeed, everything here is sensibly priced. Appetizers are from $3.25 for a garden salad to $8.85. Main courses at dinner range from $11.85 to $19.45.

Modern Snack Bar may seem to be in a time warp but it is one where good food and friendly service and lack of attitude are paramount. It must represent one of the best values for excellently cooked wholesome food on Long Island and one can only hope that it stays just as it is for another fifty years or more because to change it would be to spoil its unique nature.

Greenport Mayor Looks To The Past And The Future

By R.B. Stuart

David Kapell has been the mayor of Greenport for the last 12 years. Over that time the face of his downtown has been brought back to life by aesthetic improvements through his vision and hard work.

His first challenge was the unkempt waterfront property called Mitchell Park. In 1994 not knowing how he would do it, he proposed a plan to the board of Greenport to contact the bank that was foreclosing on the neglected property and to also contact the famous aerospace company, Northrop Grumman.

Kapell gathered the steam to make his vision of revitalizing downtown Greenport realized, by negotiating with the bank for the property. He and his board also managed to get Northrop Grumman to agree to give the town a carousel under the condition that Mitchell Park was built and that it be placed there.

"The whole thing was an implausible dream at the time. We didn't own the property and nobody was able to afford the carousel. My idea was to pursue the carousel and place it there in a waterfront park, somehow, all of this worked," Kapell stated.

In June of 1995, the carousel (built by an amusement ride company and designed to be portable) was donated to Greenport by Northrop Grumman.

In 1996 the town held a design competition for the park. Designers from all over came to compete and interestingly, the top two winners were embroiled in legal battles, which the town didn't want to align themselves with. Fortunately, the scheme of the third prizewinner, created by a firm called SHoP, an architectural firm based in Manhattan, had captured everyone's imagination. They won the bid.

SHoP began work in early 1997 and stage one of Mitchell Park opened in June of 2001. This picturesque waterfront park also has an amphitheatre, boardwalk and ice-skating in the winter months.

The second phase of the park is now complete and Greenport will be having a ribbon cutting ceremony at the end of the month. The success of this project has put SHoP, a relatively unknown firm, on the map. They have evolved into a major success in Manhattan.

The recent renovations of the 1939 Greenport Village Cinema by owner Josh Sapan, has also helped the community. It had been languishing up until last winter when the renovations began, it reopened in June and Sapan plans on further renovations to be made during this winter. Mayor Kapell is excited about the renovation saying, "To have a viable movie theatre is an anchor to the business district."

There have been other positive forces that have turned Greenport into a wonderful place to be. Kapell brought in New York City's Guardian Angel pioneer, Curtis Sliwa, on gratis, to assist in training local volunteers to patrol the streets of Greenport. "Primarily, you can still leave your cars unlocked on the streets, but in the village there is criminal activity, chronic drug consumption and trafficking," Kapell admits.

"After 12 years as mayor it remains to be a plague on our children. Instead of sweeping it under the rug, we're choosing to do something different about it."

With Sliwa's guidance and instruction, he will be training those who want to get involved, teaching them how to work with the police and create an open line of communication with the kids snarled up in the drug world. It has been responded to with much success. Every week they have a strong group of 20-25 volunteer's training to be in the Guardian Angels Greenport Chapter. Kapell invites those who are interested in this to join, in an on going effort to stomp out this destructive seducer on the streets of Greenport.

If you're looking for a politician to sugar coat the issues, you won't find it with Kapell. He mentioned to me his thoughts on the housing issues in Greenport, "The problem with housing is the problem with supply. There is a structural defect in our market," Kapell concedes. "There is a weak seasonal economy here and the medium income for a family of four is $36,700. How can a family living on that compete with the New Yorker who chooses to move out here and is living on six figures or more? Zoning is intentionally used to limit growth. The current arrangement is a disaster, unless we do something about it, you're going to see a mass exodus off LI."

Kapell explained candidly, "It's economic elitism and it's killing our society. It's already happened on the South Fork, now the North Fork may be next. If you can't afford to live here, they don't want you. The ideal neighbor is to pay more than they have in order to increase the value of their property. If you're not as rich as them, they don't want you for you'll lessen the value of their house."

"What's missing is the desire and commitment. They say what can we do? I say, we set these rules, we can change them," he ended.

Greenport is trying to design things that attract, retain and protect kids, "And everything flows from that," Kapell said. If Greenport's dreams were realized, "It would look much like it does today. I'd like to see it look diverse economically, socially, culturally and racially. You cannot maintain a diverse society without diverse housing opportunities. Here people take pride in their homes, and that's beautiful, but the consequence of living this 'gilded life' is the lack of affordable housing. This is a threat to cultural diversity," he concluded.

Greenport also offers Drossos, an 18 hole, mini golf course, that's been in operation for 50 years. You can also take a cruise on the Peconic Bay on the ship Glory, an electrically powered, environmentally friendly vessel. You can also head down to the award winning Greenport Skate Park, which is a skateboarders dream. Here you will find inline skating and bicycling. Greenport also offers The East End Seaport Museum and Maritime Foundation. This was founded in 1990 and its purpose is to preserve Eastern LI maritime history.

Who knows where this quaint little town is heading? Things are surely better here than they used to be and the beautiful town on the water can only be described as magic. The revamping of the town has only made things better for the Greenport resident or visitor and it is definitely worth visiting.

Outerwear Fashion

Warm stylish coats and jackets are on top of everyone's list for fall shopping. Each season designers offer a variety of unique styles that may have only a slight variation from the previous season. This year prints (specifically animal prints), muted plums and greens, metallic and sparkly embroidered appliqués and faux fur (or real fur) collars have made their way to the trendiest shops and department stores.

Coats are made from an array of fabrics and woven fabrics. Some popular choices include shearling, cashmere, angora, camel, alpaca, leather, wool, mohair, silk, linen, down, and cotton just to name a few. When choosing the right coat, it's important to consider fit, warmth and style. Most people own several coats for different occasions, but the key is to be practical. However, dress coats for special occasions can make a fabulous fashion statement. Full length velvet, fur (faux fur look just as good) and cashmere coats are preferable. The outerwear market is constantly changing, but this year we're seeing a past trend with swing coats making a resurgence. Swing coats are reminiscent of the 50s and 60s and look flattering on many body types. Wide collars, big buttons and oversized cuffs have also made a comeback. Full length cashmere coats are always in demand and Calvin Klein, Donna Karan, Bill Blass and Burberry design some of the classiest cashmere creations. Crinkly velvet full and short-length jackets are also in for 2005-2006. There's something so comforting about velvet despite the lack of warmth it offers. Black, dark green, cranberry, brown, and dark blue velvet are some of the top sellers.

As for casual and sporty outerwear, LL Bean, founded in 1912, located in Freeport, Maine and

Lands' End Corp in Illinois, have always been among the top manufacturers for fleece and down ski jackets. Snow and ski outerwear is mandatory for those active individuals who like to brave the cold and ski, snowboard or hike during the fall and winter. Down is one of the best sources of material to create the warmest feel. For women, the Helly Hansen Pixel Down Jacket is a winner. And for men and women The North Face is quite popular.

In the lead for rain outerwear with $296 million in volume, is London Fog. Check out London Fog's "Stratton" Balmacaan, $158-$168 or their "Marinella" trench for women, $158. The classic "Double Breasted" trench coat for men is a timeless investment that lends itself to your wardrobe for years to come.

Burberry is yet another popular brand with a variety of signature styles such as their women's "Lancing Quilted Jacket," $345 or "Donegal" tweed coat, $925. Outerwear can often cross the boundaries from simple sophistication, to full-out fun. And, if style is more important than warmth, there is a plethora of options.

Layering sweaters with a simple jean or corduroy jacket has been a trend for some time. Fleece jackets are also a more casual approach to outerwear and can be found in an array of styles and colors. And last but not least are leather jackets. Although more popular in the 80s, leather and suede jackets will always be in style. Leather has moved from the original "Bomber" jackets of the cool days of the 50s with James Dean and Elvis to the sleek looks of the new millennium.

There are endless possibilities for every style, fabric and trend when it comes to outerwear. And remember, there are those who can't afford to buy a new coat, so donate your old coat to your nearest charity or church.

For more information, contact: New York Cares Annual Coat Drive, December 1-31, www.nycares.org or any of your local charitable organizations.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

The shops are starting their fall sales, the kids are back to school and moms are back in the gym.....Not me, I'm still shopping!

The summer is not over yet in Westhampton Beach, the weather is great and inviting. The merchants on Main Street are having their "Annual Fall Sidewalk Sale" this weekend, September 17 and 18. The theory behind this annual sale is to welcome everyone to Westhampton Beach to enjoy the shops, stroll and have a bite to eat and drink along the wonderful and quaint Main Street. Some of the shops that are participating so far are: Post Stop Café, Wetter of Not, Mustique, Shock, Koala, Open Book, Little Red Wagon, Pigs Can Fly, Shock Kids, Kimberly's Tennis, O Suzanna, Intimate Boutique, Impulse For Men, Beach Greenery, Jetties, Ben & Jerry.....Most of the shops are open year 'round, so enjoy the weather and shop and save!

Porch & Patio on Montauk Highway in East Quogue is having their annual "End of Season Sale" and everything must go! The Telescope Casual stacking chaises are now selling for two for $399 and there is outdoor wicker, grills, umbrellas, and aluminum and cast aluminum.

Going east on Montauk Highway, right across from Flowers & Co., I found a gem of a warehouse at 218 County Road 39, Southampton. Merchants East - Home Furnishings & Interior Design, owned by Whitney Knowlton, is filled to the rafters with exquisite furniture and accessories designed for coastal living. The furnishings also include contemporary home, designed with a classic British West Indies style, reminiscent of the Hemingway era. Open only on Saturday and Sundays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., you will be surprised at the relaxed atmosphere here. For information call 631-204-1199.

The Lenox Factory Outlet on Main Street in Southampton is getting ready for, guess what?

At the Gayle Willson Galler, It's A Magnolia, Southampton Halloween! There are some great sales on Halloween votives ($16.95); you can also save 50% off on second quality merchandise. Take a walk on the wild side and stock up.

At the Gayle Willson Gallery on Jobs Lane in Southampton, you will find the brand new fall line of velvets, tunics, ponchos and long scarves by "It's A Magnolia" among the gallery's exquisite clothing and jewelry. Everything is brand new and ready to go for the upcoming fall season.

Stop in and check out the "Pre-Season Back-To-School Sale" at Sunrise to Sunset (the beach and lifestyle store) for this sale on all new back to school clothing for girls, boys and men. Names like Quiksilver, Billabong, Hurley, Lost, Roxy, Split and more are included in this sale. There are also hundreds of backpacks in stock here.

Water Mill's Wendy's Fabrics East (opposite Baywoods Nursery) on Montauk Highway is having a moving sale on fabrics, trimmings, drapery and curtain rods and the savings are 50% off. With the winter coming up soon, you might want to have your necessities ready for a winter project, so now is the time to pick and choose.

I stopped at the Spielberg Nursery & Gift Shop on Montauk Highway in East Hampton to find a huge "Fall Clearance Sale" happening there. Wow, the sale included selected trees, shrubs, perennials, furniture, pottery and gifts from 10% to 50% off! This little gift shop has lots to offer, trust me on this one.

I thought I would let you know that there is a special "Fall Sale" underway at the Rodgers Larkin fine home furnishings store at 66 Newtown Lane in East Hampton village. You are sure to find significant savings on select merchandise, including floor samples; special ordered items including antique rugs and accessories. The new fall schedule is Thursday through Saturday from 10 to 5 p.m. and Sunday, noon to 5 p.m.

I kept going east and took a nice smooth ride out to Amagansett to Starfish at the Amagansett Square to see what was going on there. I haven't been there for a while. As I approached the shop, I noticed a huge sale sign, posted in the window at Starfish. It read: "Going Out Of.....All Must Go." I walked into a buying frenzy. There were sales all over the place! Cashmere sweaters in every color you can think of, that were originally $198 are now $69, Juicy Couture 50% off, quilted reversible jackets $39.99 (I bought two of them), and I managed to buy tons of jewelry at 50% off too! This is a must-stop-shop, so get going while the selection is still plentiful. Starfish is open seven days, 631-267-3455.

Until next week. Ciao and happy end-of-summer/early fall shopping!

If you have any questions or comments, or your shop is having a sale, I would love to know about it. E-mail me at Shoptil@danspapers.com or by fax at: 631-537-6755.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Pretty Peninsula

Every Wednesday East Hampton Trails Preservation Society leads a mid-week hike. Last week Gene Makl led a hike of Barcelona Neck. Two signs mark the entrance off of Route 114. One sign says "Sag Harbor Golf Course" the other sign indicates that you are entering the "Linda Gronland Memorial Nature Preserve at Barcelona Neck." Some maps identify this peninsula that juts out into the harbor east of Sag Harbor as Russell's Neck. It was named after the family that farmed the land in the 1700s.

Less than a mile after making the turn from Route 114 onto Russell's Neck Road, I passed the golf course clubhouse and turned right into the parking lot. The clubhouse has restroom facilities and there are refreshments sold there. Gene, our hike leader, directed the hikers to park further up the dirt road beyond the gravel parking lot. When all 12 of us gathered, Gene explained that because there were two other events taking place at the preserve/golf course, he had us park in a cleared area off the East Side Road. There are designated spaces for hunters in the preserve, but none for hikers. I was thankful for Gene's guidance on where to park.

While Gene began to describe the hike, his assistant Richard welcomed the non-EHTPS members, passed around the sign-in sheet, and offered Mike Bottini's hiking and kayaking books and Charles Whalen's trail maps for sale. If you wish to purchase these items call Richard at 631-324-1127.

Gene began the hike by leading us north along the East Side Road. This is the dirt road that is off to the right of the clubhouse. In the mid 1800s Sag Harbor was a busy whaling port attracting sailors from around the world. Gene explained that Barcelona Neck owes its name to the sailors' imaginations, who upon approaching Sag Harbor would remark upon the similarity of this peninsula's 80-foot-high bluffs to those at the entrance to the harbor in Spain.

Blue disks marked the trail we followed. We were walking on a dry roadbed surrounded by wetlands where you could see tupelo growing in the swampland, along with cinnamon fern, red maple, sweet pepper bush, and swamp azalea. The oak/hickory forest we walked through on the second leg of our journey contrasted this wetland environment. Through the trees we could see the marsh and waters of Northwest Creek off to our right.

We came upon some cedar posts; here a trail spur to the right takes you to Cuffee's Landing. Standing here we enjoyed the vista of Northwest Creek. Gene related to us that according to Mike Bottini's trail guide, "The landing is named for Wickham Cuffee, a whaler who was the last member of the Shinnecock and Montaukett tribes who could speak in all the dialects of both tribes."

We continued along the east side of the peninsula to its northern tip, by Channel Landing. From here we could see Cedar Point County Park with its light house, Shelter Island's Mashomack Preserve, the Grace Estate preserve to our right, and North Haven to our extreme left. Gene said that there are over 4000 acres of preserved land bordering Northwest Harbor. It was a sunny day and the water was clean and inviting. Here the water is pristine because the surrounding land has been left in its natural state.

We backtracked until we reached Third Crossing Road (marked by several wide vertical posts) the most northerly of three trails cutting across the peninsula. We took a right turn that brought us to the north edge of the neck. We walked over a dune that is moving south and covering the trail. From the top of this dune, views of Cedar Point and Mashomack arrested our attention for a while.

When we continued, we headed south along Sag Harbor Bay. Here Gene had us leave the marked trail and walk along the shoreline from Salt Pond to Marsh Pond Landing, which pointed us straight into "First Crossing Road." From there we continued south to our cars. Gene explained that if we continued along West Side Road we would find ourselves walking through the golf course and risk being hit by golf balls. I also appreciated his not taking us through the wetland trails on the southern part of this property where chiggers and ticks are found this time of year.

There are many lovely water views that make Barcelona Neck one of my favorite places to walk year round.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Lotus Super 7

These cars were so diminutive that it's amazing that I was never run over, car and all, by a speeding Checker Cab. My wife was aghast at my driving the Super 7 in traffic, so much so that her nickname for the Lotus was the "Coffin Car." Like I said earlier, it's amazing that we survive dangerous designs and poor driving decisions.

I have a personal vendetta against cars that don't handle because I believe a car's handling is the first deterrent against an accident. If an automobile handles, accidents can be avoided, period. In defense of the silly Lotus 7 and Porsche 550 that I foolishly drove on city roads, let me just say that those two cars were two of the world's best handling vehicles.

Even though cars today are noticeably safer than cars from just a few years ago, more emphasis should be put upon a car's handling. It seems that Detroit is enamored with giving a car a soft ride, which in most cases is detrimental to its handling. If some automakers can make great handling cars that have perfectly acceptable rides, like BMW and Mercedes, why can't American cars have the same suspension designs?

The worst handling vehicles are the SUVs. Every time I see a serious accident, it usually involves an SUV that crashed and rolled over. This is becoming too common and is certainly something all car manufacturers should address. I hate to use foreign car examples again, but both BMW and Mercedes build SUVs that seem to handle much better than their American counterparts. There is no magic here, just better suspension design. Why don't Ford, GM and Chrysler just cut apart a German SUV and copy its design? It's done all the time. Just change a few screws here and there to bypass any patent infringements.

A lot of SUVs are built on pickup truck chassis. To put it bluntly, the chassis of a pickup truck is basically the same as that of a stage coach. Be wary of driving fast around curves in a vehicle that is really a pickup truck carrying a large, high and heavy metal body disguised as a family hack. Think of it more as a family truckster, and treat it with respect, especially in the wet.

One final note regarding tires: All of them have really improved over the last ten years. When putting new tires on your car buy the best you can afford, because budget tires are usually of poorer quality, especially when it comes to handling. Don't always go for super long life tires, but go for the best wet and dry handling ones you can find. These grades are written on the sides of the tire. Ask the dealer if you can't figure things out. We can all survive in spite of others' mistakes, just drive smart.

There was no such thing as roll-over-protection in those early cars. In that kind of accident, your head became the roll bar. To this day, I always get a kick out of seeing pictures of race drivers of not very long ago, driving race cars in sport jackets and ties. Eventually when some of these early race drivers wore helmets they were leather, like a barnstorming pilot's headgear. I used to drive both a Porsche 550 Spyder and a Lotus Super 7 around Manhattan.

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Punk Rock & Nintendo

Following last week's article about CBGB, and my attempts to get you to go support their cause and fight one small part of Manhattan's transformation into the hulking, unstoppable MetroDisney behemoth, I have bad news. If you went — and you probably didn't — you wasted your money. I just read in Rolling Stone that the day after Blondie and Public Enemy (I know — why didn't I tell you? Public Enemy!) rocked Washington Square Park for the cause, CBGB's lease expired and it was not renewed.

Needless to say, I'm deeply saddened by this turn of events. I'm a bit young to say I was in the scene at punk's inception, but it played a major part of my youth and continues to define my view of the world. CBs is a giant piece of the legacy that maintains importance for millions like me. I'll keep you posted. In the meantime, let's flip the coin and look now at a very corporate, very Nouveau York establishment that has recently come to fruition in Rockefeller Center.

Unlike punk rock, which started around the time I was born and didn't strongly affect my life until I was an early teen, electronic gaming grew up right alongside me. At 29 years old, I'm pretty much part of the first true generation of video-gamers. We started with the simple Atari and Coleco systems with rudimentary graphics and what are now considered archaic games like Space Invaders and Pac Man. But then came Nintendo. The Nintendo Entertainment System (NES) ignited the golden age of video games. It began with a little game called Super Mario Brothers and launched a craze that swept the planet. In the years since, Mario has become part of the cultural lexicon appearing in dozens of games, thousands of merchandise items, and even his own, albeit crappy, major motion picture.

Today we are on the brink of a new generation of gaming consoles. The coming systems are now four incarnations beyond the NES, but devoted fans still continue to play those games created in 1986 and the years that followed. Nintendo's characters inspire love and nostalgia for die-hard fans that can never be duplicated by anything the newer and more popular Sony (Playstation) or Microsoft (Xbox) might try. Titles like Zelda, Mario, Pokemon, Metroid, and their sequels have become classics in the industry. Like Apple computer has done before them, Nintendo unveiled their very own store in Manhattan on May 14th of this year.

Yes, it's part of the problem with New York, but it's still pretty cool for an old fan-boy like myself. The two floors of Nintendo goodness were actually host to the official Pokemon Center store (also owned by Nintendo) from 2002 to the start of 2005. Now visitors will find reams of games for their favorite consoles as well as an absurd array of merchandise toting images of all the greatest video stars. Kiosks are available for game-play. Displays show "historical" items from the company, including prototypes and special limited release items. Some exclusives are for sale at the store for the real maniacs — the ones that will drop hundreds on eBay for Japanese import games. One such gem is a limited edition gold-plated Game Boy Advance portable console signed by the legendary game creator, Shigeru Miyamoto. The atmosphere is modern, clean, and fun for everyone that would care enough to set foot in the store to begin with. Tables are set for those less inclined to play games on their television but prefer instead to duke it out with their Pokemon cards.

Nintendo's new system "Revolution" is still in the shadow of secrecy, but we do know that it will make their entire library of hits available for download. The company knows what their back catalogue means to fans. As I pack for my honeymoon in Aruba, I'm downloading emulated NES games to my brandy-new Playstation Portable. With all that Sony has available, I'm stocking up on titles I was playing at age 12 — go figure. If this article sounds like Greek to you, I'd probably wait until next week for your trek west along 495. The weather's still good, don't sweat it. But it won't be good forever, so if you know what I'm talking about this week, it's never too early to stock up on games for the coming winter.

The Skinny on Fasting

All those who read the tabloids know that fasting is no longer reserved for the devoutly religious, raw-foodists and chronically ill. The practice has entered the arena of mainstream pop-culture with a following of enthusiastic socialites, young professionals and rail-thin celebrities. It seems the holy man's fast of the ancient world has become the latest fad diet.

I am instinctively repelled by this New Age pseudo-spiritualism that has resurfaced. I harbor a sinister urge to sneak SPAM into the non-dairy oatmeal of every pedantic, self-appointed guru that I encounter. However, there are truly dedicated and well-informed voices on the side of alternative medicine and they should not be discredited.

These specialists believe that a juice fast, which entails a liquid diet of regulated raw fruits and vegetables, works as a "detoxification" of the body's accumulated toxins. Some compare our digestive tracts to a backed-up toilet, a stagnate cesspool or festering pile of uncollected garbage. They believe a regimented juice fast releases these clogged poisons and that through "giving the gastrointestinal tract a rest" fasting allows the body to repair itself on a cellular level.

This is an elaborate and manipulative hoax of detoxification, according to researchers on the other side. They assert that the notion that stagnation and decay in the colon produce toxins that poison the body is an ancient concept that has been long discredited. "There's no such thing as detoxification through a three-week diet," one doctor declared. "It's certainly not medicine and it's potentially quite dangerous."

Whether or not detoxification is scientifically valid, most doctors agree that fasting is not an effective weight-loss strategy. By forcing one's body into starvation mode, the metabolism slows. As a result, few people who actually lose weight fasting maintain their loss. While total fasting does result in a rapid initial weight loss, most of the loss is fluid, rather than fat. You lose body fat, but also considerable muscle (including heart muscle) and minerals. This loss can reach dangerous proportions.

An individual in good health can undergo a 24-hour fast without danger. Beyond a day or two, fasting can cause fatigue, headaches, irritability, nausea, low blood pressure, and problems with heart rhythms. It is especially hazardous for anyone with a chronic illness such as diabetes and should be avoided by children, pregnant women and those struggling with obesity.

If embarking on a fast, one must understand that the physical response to a juice fast is extreme, including a coated tongue, nausea, insomnia, anxiety, hunger pains, headaches, exhaustion, confusion, dizziness, joint pain, irritability, and many other unmentionable discomforts. However, unpleasant symptoms subside rather quickly, allowing the individual to continue with normal activities. Soon hunger also subsides and the classic response is a feeling of euphoria, high energy, clarity of thought, and an exuberant spirit.

Skeptics claim this feeling of weakness and being sick is actually the body's natural response to starvation, a state of physical stress in which the body pulls from its own storage of glycogen and protein. Juice fasters claim this discomfort is the toxins passing through the body.

Anorexia is also linked to extreme fasting. Certain specialists worry that fasters might become addicted to the "euphoria" and heightened sense of control that fasting gives them. They are certain that disorders, if already present, will surely be exacerbated.

Sooner or later you must face the world of eating. The junk-food shrines on every street corner have waited patiently and what was pushed into the peripheral through fasting, is now back in the fore. Voracious hunger awakens from sleep and the fragrance of KFC is all the more intoxicating. One must even be careful how the fast is broken and make sure to eat a mild and simple low-fat diet of grains, lean protein, vegetables and fruit.

Fasting has long been a part of the vain girl's struggle in the annual run-up to bikini-time. Now this risky crash diet has become some mantra for well-being promoted by Hollywood waifs and women's magazines. Has starvation suddenly become acceptable in the name of "health?" Have we lost touch with our bodies, perhaps our minds?

When done safely, fasting may be a tool that enables people to feel better about their bodies and give them a proactive role in their health. No doubt a break from Kool Aid and Big Macs is a positive change. The final word is that fasts are risky and medical experts on either side agree that they should be accompanied by medical consultation and shouldn't take the place of medical attention, balanced eating and common sense. A fast is a serious endeavor that demands research and serious attention at all stages. and not for Manhattanites planning to catch a cab, chard juice in hand.

Roll Away With Me

As a kid growing up in Suburbia, USA, there were a few rites of passage that marked the transitions from toddler to kid, from kid to adolescent, from adolescent to teen, from teen to young adult, from young adult — wait. I still am a young adult. Right?

Either way, those rites of passage will always hold a special place in my memory: "I am a big girl now!" I shrieked as I wobbled away on my first two wheeler. "I am now a real teenager!" I shouted as I drove away in my parents' car.

The transition from kid to adolescent was monumental for me because it meant I could do stuff without always being supervised. I could walk with my friends to town, as long as I looked both ways before crossing the street. And, as any suburban kid can attest, the adolescent has free rein at the roller rink.

That's where it all began — the fumbling for that cute boy's hand, the cheap dangly earrings from the vending machines infecting your newly pierced ears, the loud music, the sugar highs. Roller skating rinks were as much a part of my early 90s adolescence as Debbie Gibson or slap-bracelets. Little did I know then that I was engaging in a sport that had been recommended by the American Heart Association as a complete aerobic workout that involved all the muscles of the body, particularly the heart. While I was cruising around that endless rink, with fluorescent necklaces wrapped around my neck and 80s rock blasting in my ears, I was burning about 300 calories an hour! And if I had been attempting in any way to exert myself — like those brave souls who participated in the contests — the amount of calories burned would double!

The first known roller skate was invented in 1760

by a Belgian inventor named Joseph Merlin. Mr. Merlin decided to try out his new wheels by wearing them to a party, but he lost control and smashed into a mirror. After that, he gave up roller skating in order to pay off his seven years of bad luck, but that was only the beginning for the roller skate.

The first patented design was by Monsieur Petitbled in 1819, but people had a hard time actually turning on this rigid deck. In 1863, a Massachusetts businessman named James Plimpton invented a roller skate with enough "give" that it could actually turn. He then opened the first roller skating club, the old fashioned roller rink (if a roller rink isn't old-fashioned enough), in New York.

Over centuries, the roller skate developed into a beloved pastime. It was sad to see those four-wheeled wonders give way to in-line skates, which became a legend of their own. Little did I know, however, that this was actually getting back to the roots of roller skating, because Plimpton was the one who introduced the four-wheel design. Before that, all skates were in-line.

Whether you like the oh-so-eighties feel of the four-wheeled roller skates, or you prefer the hip nineties flavor of the fast and furious Rollerblades, you are doing your body a favor by strapping on some wheels.

And this Friday, September 16, you'll get your chance to shine in the rink once again, to relive those glory days of your adolescence.

Red Creek Park Roller Rink in Hampton Bays will host Roller Night from 7 to 9 p.m. Spindrift Sound will provide the music and entertainment, and there will be a skateboard demonstration by skaters from Inline 1 Extreme at the Skate Park. Helmets are required (boy, have times changed), and kids 7 years and under must be accompanied by an adult. Hey, you haven't hit that rite of passage yet. But never fear — you'll get there.

Skateboards and scooters are not permitted. This event will be hosted by the Town of Southampton Parks and Recreation Department in partnership with Skidmore's Sports and Styles. The Red Creek Roller Rink is located at 102 Old Riverhead Road in Hampton Bays. For more information, call 631-728-8585.

So, for those of you who thought that the phenomenon of roller skating had fizzled and died along with the cast of "The Facts of Life," think again. This rite of passage, or this roll down Memory Lane, has transcended the new millennium with the ease and endurance of the Simpsons or Fudgsicles — and it's good for the heart, too.

Clippity Clop with Ali Spencer

It's no secret that in the past few years yoga has become something of a fitness phenomenon. Yoga studios are popping up on every corner of every town, and there seem to be as many different types of yoga as there are yoga studios. From relaxing and gentle, to physically demanding, to very, very hot, there is a type of yoga for everyone. And now there is yoga specifically designed for equestrians.

It may seem contradictory, but many people who ride horses have found spending time on a yoga mat can greatly improve their time in the saddle. For many people, yoga and horseback riding have similarities. Both are physical activities that can have a significant and gratifying spiritual component. The mental clarity and self-awareness that can be achieved through yoga can only improve people's understanding of and relationship with their horses.

Of course, the physical benefits that yoga can have for an equestrian are much more tangible. The most obvious is probably improved balance. Good balance is of the utmost importance for anyone who wishes to ride a horse. No one wants to feel as if they are going to topple off the side (or back) of the animal. Furthermore, feeling unbalanced on a horse may cause riders to put unnecessary pressure. They may use the reins to support their hands or grip the saddle with their knees. However it manifests, being off-balance on a horse can keep riders from using their aids properly and effectively, and can also prevent the horse from moving and responding freely and correctly. Many yoga poses require people to achieve balance on their own two feet, which can only improve their balance on a horse's back.

Going hand in hand with balance is alignment. Having a straight posture can only help a person feel more balanced. But for an equestrian, proper alignment is critical. Horses are incredibly sensitive animals, keenly aware of any moves that riders make in the saddle. Many riders, unbeknownst to them, lean to one side while on the horse, which can cause the horse to lean to one side. Being centered on the horse's back will improve the performance of the horse as well as the rider. Much of yoga stresses the proper alignment of the body, from the neck to the spine to the hips and beyond.

The importance of balance and alignment to horseback riding may seem fairly obvious, but the importance of proper breathing may not. For practitioners of yoga, proper breathing techniques are of utmost importance. They help relax the body and focus the mind. But for riders who are cantering down to a three-foot fence or completing a difficult dressage test, how they are breathing probably seems completely insignificant. But it isn't. Horses can sense what kind of state of mind their riders are in. Many times, if a rider is tense or scared, this emotion will translate to the horse. By focusing on proper and controlled breathing, riders will be able to maintain calm and focus, which will, in turn, help the horse to focus on his job.

But the benefits of yoga for a rider go beyond basic physical improvements. Yoga can also lead to a greater spiritual understanding of oneself, which can then give riders a better understanding of their animal. One important factor is stress relief. Horses can pick up on negativity in their riders and will often have an adverse reaction to it. Along those same lines, if riders approach their horses in a calm manner, not preoccupied with the stresses of life, and are ready to focus 100% of their attention on improving their riding, the horses will respond by giving their best effort.

Horseback riding is not about controlling the animal. It is about helping them to perform at their highest potential, which oftentimes means changing our own habits and behaviors, both mental and physical. We expect a lot from our horses. We expect them to travel in a straight line, and get frustrated when they travel with their haunches to the inside. We expect them to bend perfectly with the slightest pressure from our leg, and can't understand why they instead fall to the inside. We expect our horses to be light, responsive and supple to our aids, but perhaps we must first look at how we are contributing to, and perhaps causing, the problem.

If you are interested in learning more about yoga for equestrians, there are two recommended books, both of which are available on www.amazon.com. The first is Yoga for Equestrians by Linda Benedik and Veronica Worth. The second is A Gymnastic Riding System Using Mind, Body, and Spirit: Progressive Training for Horse and Rider by Betsy Steiner and Jennifer O. Bryant.

review: sugar at the Gateway Playhouse

You really have to have a lot of self-confidence to take Some Like It Hot, an iconic comedy film with a dream cast of two of the funniest and most professional actors ever in Tony Curtis and Jack Lemmon, plus the legendary Marilyn Monroe, and decide to turn it into a Broadway musical. Well, that is what David Merrick did. Sugar, the result of the music and words collaboration between Jules Styne and Bob Merrill, ran on Broadway for two years.

One of the reasons why Sugar is not one of the regularly revived shows must be due to the casting problems. You need two leading men who are good at comedy and also can sing and dance and just for good measure they have to spend most of the show dressed as women. Oh, I almost forgot, you also need a leading lady who is beautiful and capable of filling Marilyn's shoes (as well as other parts of a lady's underwear). So full marks to Gateway Playhouse Producer Paul Allan for having the courage to stage this as the last production of an eventful season and even higher marks to Casting and Artistic Director Robin Joy Allan for a simply superb job. Without exception this cast was excellent.

Kirk Mouser and Larry Raben, as the 'male' leads, had that wonderful synergy that is essential for really top class comedy duos and they both made very impressive, and almost believable, ladies. The beautiful Elizabeth Stanley, as Sugar Kane, spends a lot of her stage time in a partial state of undress and shows that she can measure up to Monroe in many important respects (she also has a much better singing voice but needs to work on softening her top notes).

If anyone does not know the story, it revolves around two out-of-work musicians in Chicago at the height of gangsterdom, who accidentally witness a mob killing and to escape from joining the ranks of the dead join the ranks of an all-girl band due to perform in Miami Beach. Close contact with Sugar naturally raises all kinds of emotions in both of them. Joe (Josephine), played by Kirk Mouser, switches genders frequently while trying to keep up his disguise but also while trying to persuade Sugar that he is a wealthy playboy. Meanwhile, Daphne (Jerry), played by Larry Rabin, is kept busy fighting off the amorous advances of an aging and very wealthy playboy, Sir

Osgood Fielding, stylishly played by Dick Decareau. Like all good comedies all is well by the end of the show though we are left wondering about Daphne's fate!

While you are unlikely to go home whistling the tunes, the score works well, there are some good lyrics and the choreography by Scott Thompson, based on the original by the legendary Gower Champion, has some intriguing and hilarious moments. The best of these is the use of the tap dancing mobsters to produce the staccato machine gun noise and the death scene of their leader, Spats Palazzo, wonderfully danced by Jonathan Brody, has to be seen – it had the audience in hysterics. The 'dance' of the aging roués in their wheelchairs is not far behind in its comic effect. In fact the whole of the evening is one long laugh.

Cyndi Neal as the leader of the band, Dave Konig as the harassed manager and a wonderful ensemble, all make major contributions to the success of the show that runs until September 24th in Bellport.

Once again, the end of summer unfortunately brings an end to another Gateway season, one that the management can look back on with some pride. To offer shows as diverse as The Full Monty, 42nd Street and Aida and, of course, Sugar, with casts and productions of Broadway quality and at prices a third of what you have to pay nowadays in Manhattan, is a wonderful benefit for all musical theater lovers on Long Island who will be eagerly awaiting news early next year of the 2006 offerings.

review: the talent given us

There is a limit to what I can tell you about the independent movie The Talent Given Us, so you will just have to trust me when I say this movie is a must-see. It opened at the Sag Harbor Cinema last Friday.

I had been skeptical. When I hear the term "independent," I think pretentious, depressing, grainy, confusing. That is confounded by the fact that the movie was filmed on a single, hand-held camera, which I took to mean I would feel nauseated while my brain tried to convert the jittery movements into a stable picture. Plus, the film stars the writer/director's immediate family members playing versions of themselves. Reality TV, anyone? But my preconceptions were way off.

Within the first five minutes of watching this film, I was riveted. It is hilarious, fascinating, uncomfortable, and touching all at once. I wrote that I cannot tell you much about the movie for two reasons. I do not want to give anything away about the story of the dysfunctional, but loving family. It is not as though there are surprises in the sense of The Sixth Sense. Quite the contrary, the story unfolds so naturally and with such honesty that it could be about many families. True, the members of this family wear their hearts on their sleeves and speak more forthrightly about more intimate topics than do many families, but I suspect that everyone who watches the movie will recognize something in themselves and at the same time take comfort in the fact (or complete fiction) that their family is not as dysfunctional as that portrayed in the movie. Watching the conversations unfold was so enjoyable that I do not want to ruin them for the reader by reporting on the specifics.

Another reason I am limited in what I can report is that this is a very adult movie, with difficult themes and harsh language, not appropriate for reproduction in this paper. The movie is not for children at all, nor for the faint of heart. The father is ailing, the mother is emotionally and sexually frustrated, one of the daughters brings her endless time in therapy into brutally honest conversations with her family, there are drugs, and so on. But this caution is not meant to suggest that the film is anything but wonderfully enjoyable, thanks to the film's generous use of humor and love mixed in with the pathos. Think Eugene O'Neill meets Woody Allen.

The movie is terrific in its own right, as a story about a family. Andrew Wagner's script is tight and utterly real, his direction and cinematography professional, and his family's acting completely natural. Yet, one cannot review the movie solely on the basis of its qualities. Wagner's parents Allen and Judith (who are not actors), his sisters Emily and Maggie (both actors) and friends Billy Wirth and Judy Dixon (also actors) play themselves. I do not know how much of the film reveals Wagner's family's and friends' true personalities, conflicts, and life events or how much of the script is fiction, but whatever the answer, his family's and friends' willingness to expose some version of themselves – and to do so with such honesty in their portrayals – is amazing.

The movie, which seems to be heading towards cult classic status, is being privately distributed. While it has received critical acclaim and the attention of a number of Hollywood's glitterati, it still only plays in art houses in a small number of cities. It has been interesting to read that Hollywood had a terrible summer at the box office, no doubt because many people decided that the endless array of sequels, remakes and high-concept films were not worth the price of admission. I suspect that before long The Talent Given Us will attract a Hollywood distributor willing to give the film appropriate advertising and a broader release. I also suspect that the film will be remembered when the Academy Award nominations are announced. But do not wait until then to see it.

MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

The Man

Les Mayfield directs this should-be-funny-but-isn't-that-funny comedy. Eugene Levy steals the show as an ever-questioning Andy Fidler, a salesman caught up in a case of mistaken identity. Samuel L. Jackson plays his usual hard-ass detective in an attempt to find the man who shot his partner. The two get entangled in a not so elaborate plot and the expected humor occurs. If you like typecasting you will really enjoy this film.

The 40 Year Old Virgin

With his 6-year stint as a correspondent on "The Daily Show" and recent role in the American version of "The Office," Steve Carell has built up a strong background in TV comedy. He makes a stride towards the big screen, playing the title character in this Ben Stiller-esque comedy. Nice supporting work from Paul Rudd and the long underrated Catherine Keener help to float this above-average comedy.

The Constant Gardener

Director Fernando Mereilles was the man responsible for the phenomenal City of God and this stylish adaptation of the John Le Carré novel will help to maintain that reputation. The story revolves around the murder of an activist (Rachel Weisz) and her husband's (Ralph Fiennes) attempts to solve the mysteries surrounding her death. That tragically rare thing: a classy and effective thriller.

The Transporter 2

The pure action film is a surprisingly scarce commodity. Others get bogged down with purpose or ethics, but this sequel to the 2002 French action hit has no such concerns. Though it's an oddly cheap direction for screenwriter Luc Besson (who was responsible for the excellent The Professional in 1994) to take, it is refreshingly unpretentious. Jason Statham returns as the deliveryman plagued by car chases, fight sequences and explosions throughout.

Red-Eye

It's been a while since the Scream trilogy and last year's werewolf flick Cursed never really worked out, so it's nice to see director Wes Craven back on form in this claustrophobic horror film. Rising starlet Rachel McAdams plays an airline passenger who discovers that the man in the next seat (a very creepy Cillian Murphy, fresh from his sinister role in Batman Begins) is involved in a menacing plot concerning her family.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

The Brother's Grimm is grim. Are grim? Were grim? Grimmer than? Phooey! Grimmer grammar aside, this movie's exercise in excess is the kind of nonsense that gets my goat (whatever the heck that means). I'm equally befuddled about how this clunker got made. I can't understand how this twittish bit of fantasy can be spun off like Rapunzel's fairytale hair – too long, too tangled and good for only a leg-up onto entertainment. Also set aside the fact that the Grimm brothers were monumental figures in literature whose folk tales are historical landmarks on the consciousness of our lives and, that would have made a fine film. In this mish-mosh, the brothers are con artists in early 19th century Germany playing upon the superstitious of none-too-bright villagers. They would concoct bogus enchanted boogey monsters and, for a price, dispel the spells. This was made easier because at that time the French military had occupied the countryside. The brothers, as hysterically overwrought as the other stylistic techniques, get their come-uppance when a made-up legend comes to life. Life? The movie itself takes about half of its running time of 118 minutes to come to what life there is in the boring repetition of eruption after eruption of visual outbursts that eventually are as off-putting as a case of acne.

The grim brothers who rant and rave constantly and run about like demented fools are played by Matt Damon, as Wilhelm, looking like a totally out-of-date rock wannabe, with more fake hair covering his head than a molting stuffed bear. Brother Jacob (see Grimm's law in an encyclopedia. These were serious types) is acted out by Heath Ledger also behaving bizarrely and attempting to match some surrealism of the sound and fury that signifies nothing. Popping up the out-dated 60-70s Kool Aid Acid splash of "mind blowing" grooviness – is the new technology – the computer generation of make-believe. The mechanical effects come through effectively (mostly), as we revisit the past. An enchanted forest, a wicked queen, need I go on? The original classics, The Wizard of Oz and Snow White are not even closely brushed – let alone challenged as who's the fairest in the land.

The Brothers Grimm is grimy as well. Its brown, muddy settings are unappetizing. Like you-know-what twirled with a stick. Bugs and monsters splat across the screen as if on a windshield. You are, no doubt, aware as to who has directed this muddled extravagance of too, too much over matter. It is Terry Gilliam. If you didn't guess it, it is because he's been absent from the screen for seven years. In between he helmed a Man of La Mancha that sunk before completion after millions had been spent. Misspent you'll agree if you see the documentary shot during its production. Intricate costumes and sets and silliness are no substitute for expressive emotions involved in content. There was some of that in his Brazil and perhaps a bit of one or two others. This movie was shelved for a few years after completion of photography and the shelf-life of a gorgonzola as aromatic as this one is not for the ages. Hansel and Gretel will still be eating themselves out of house and home for a long, long time after Matt Damon and Heath Ledger are able to live down their misdirected entrapment in this crummy reconstruction of the Grimm legacy.

As written by Ehren Kruger, who reincarnated zombies in The Skeleton Key, Brothers Grimm has some of the same old "Hoodoo". The story follows the brothers (and that's not easy) as they meddle into the disappearance of a lot of young women from one of those brown gucky towns. They're pushed into this by a nasty French general done with one of the most terrible French accents ever by Jonathan Pryce, one of Gilliam's favorites – not mine. Gilliam also reprises another favorite of his, a mutilated rabbit. What with sacrificial virgins being swallowed up and hokey, weird happenings and creatures, it is suggested that you go back to the source – not the Grimm tales. This movie is the "Son of All Bad Horror Movies." However, movie fans, what do you expect for somewhere over $80 million spent – a good movie?

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

See a Film, Hear an Artist

This coming Friday, Ross Bleckner will present the film Teorema at the Pollock-Krasner house. This event is part of the "Artists on Film" series, hosted by art-historian and critic Marion Weiss, wherein celebrated local artists choose a film and describe to the audience its meaning and importance with regard to their own creative endeavors.

Written and directed by poet, philosopher and filmmaker Pier Paolo Pasolini, in 1968, Teorema is the story of a mysterious stranger who seduces an entire household (one that implicitly equates sex with religious experience). Using non-professional actors with professionals, Pasolini attempted to combine realism with revolutionary concepts: sex, violence, and sadism. The film scandalized the Roman Catholic Church and was banned in Italy.

Bleckner's choice of film might be understood as emblematic of his deep connection with light and the transcendence it brings. This visually startling film evokes as much emotion through dazzling slants of light and jarring composition as through its plot.

Bleckner's scope of work reflects this sort of transcendence. Many recall his earlier stripe paintings that popularized the 1980s Op Art movement. Much like the other work in that movement, these painting featured vertical rods that shifts in and out of focus. These stripes gradually morphed into forms set against deep, void-like color fields. These shapes took the form of urns, flowers, fields of stars, architectural detailing, and birds. "Birdland", the first of Bleckner's works that I encountered, is a large canvas covered in ghostly blues, a flock of birds suspended in confused, directionless flight. The effect is both haunting and uplifting.

Ross Bleckner has been known to escape to his home in Sagaponack, where he finds a solitude and serenity that allows him to focus on his work. However, his inspiration is not derived from this finite setting, for as Mary Boone once said, Ross Bleckner "always transcends subject matter."

Bleckner is considered the great memorialist of our day and is described as the primary painter to bear witness to the AIDS crisis. However, once again Bleckner eludes being type-casted. claiming that AIDS isn't his theme, but rather "mortality and commemoration."

In earlier works his symbolism frequently dealt with issues surrounding death and dying and his subject matter seemed to hint at the afterlife. Now his concerns are more physical and viscera as he puts human sickness under a microscope, rendering sickly colors and cells festering with malignancies. Bleckner hoped to convey "the idea of something beautiful, like a cell, mutating into something treacherous," or more broadly, to find beauty in human vulnerability.

From stripes to bird to cellular precision, stripes, to lyrical brush strokes, to pointillism, Bleckner's work shares one common thread: light. Undeniable, unforgettable and living light. Even his Op Art stripes seem to be "beams of light diffused by rain," as put by one critic. In fact, Bleckner's work manufactures light, emits light, seems to be made of light. He once stated that angels haunt his imagination and I believe we see them in all stages of his work.

Pollock-Krasner House is located at 830 Springs Fireplace Rd. in East Hampton. The event begins at 7:30 p.m. and tickets are $5 ($4 for member).

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

VITO SISTI'S ANNUAL GIG AT ASHAWAGH HALL

It may sound a bit flip to characterize the current exhibit at Ashawagh Hall as Vito Sisti's "gig," especially since Mr. Sisti is not an artist and not even in the show. Yet he's closely connected to it as curator and organizer. He may also function as an events coordinator in public relations terms – or even a producer in film jargon. The point is, the presentation continues to bear Mr. Sisti's signature over the last several years.

The art itself has a reputation for being funky, the openings for being fun and boisterous. Or so we're told: this is the first time this critic has seen a Sisti show.

We're glad to report that the art is still funky. It's also definitely anti-Hampton as far as exhibits go at more traditional galleries. This is not to say that some of these same artists never show at Hamptons or New York venues. They do. And well they should.

The show's idiosyncratic nature is established right away as viewers walk through the door with Karyn Mannix's "Your Uniqueness is Special," an apt title characterizing the entire display.

The work is part of a series featuring nipples in a grid-like fashion. Is it meant to be a political statement? We don't know for sure, but like the recent film, Sin City, we assume it's supposed to be camp.

While Trish Franey's cats are not sexually provocative like Ms. Mannix's work, they seem camp as well, each one possessing a distinct personality. Kristi Hood's "Century Garden" is unique and nostalgic: various glass vessels and odd objects placed on a bureau top, evoking the feeling that each item recalls a special moment or experience.

We were especially glad to see Nick Tarr's work on display, his unique art perfectly at home in this exhibit. His "Optical Pop" sets the scene for the series: a look into his "globe" reminds us that Mr. Tarr has combined diverse aesthetic devices to create a virtual reality way ahead of its time.

It's also good to see David Slater's pieces, especially "Mardi Gras Still Life," knowing it was probably done several years ago but is now particularly relevant. So, too, are works by Dennis Leri, recalling the destruction associated with September 11.

And finally, speaking about being happy to experience certain artist's work, we have to include Frances Alenikoff, whose 18 works are more than we've seen under one roof outside Ms. Alenikoff's own home. They are also reminders, not of recent catastrophes, but of the artist's considerable and broad talents.

Some work cannot be labeled idiosyncratic, of course, but they are valuable, nonetheless. This includes watercolors by Abby Abrams, where her vistas have been expanded to include wide views and curving configurations, Marilyn Church's gestural figures, Elisca Jeanssone's geometric shapes, and Gerry Giliberti's stone forms.

This show may not suit everyone's taste, but one thing is certain. It's not boring.

The exhibit will be on view at Ashawagh Hall in The Springs until September 18.

HONORING THE ARTIST: BARBARA HADDEN

Cover artist Barbara Hadden is well aware that she's a fortunate person. Right now she's in the midst of packing for her annual trip to Maine where she spends several weeks. She says she's "obsessed" with going there each year, particularly to enjoy the fall foliage. But she also adds that, "I live in North Haven, and there's a beautiful view of Long Beach. It's the best time to be here in the autumn. I'm so lucky to have both Sag Harbor and Maine."

Ms. Hadden quickly adds, however, that her place in Maine is courtesy of a former employer (she used to cook for an elderly family member). Considering Ms. Hadden's caring demeanor, it's easy to see why she has committed a large part of her life helping others. Ms. Hadden shares the fact that she also worked as an occupational therapist at New York's Roosevelt Hospital. It was there that Ms. Hadden says she started creating murals with her patients, an experience that helped motivate her to become an artist.

Ms. Hadden had other early commitments, too, including the theatre. As she puts it, "I ran away from home to New York so I could study acting. I went to the American Academy and the Herbert Berghoff Studio where I studied with Mr. Berghoff." (This was no mean feat considering that Mr. Berghoff was one of the most respected teachers of his day.)

"I was so serious about acting," Ms. Hadden continues. "I wore black all the time; I even had a small part in a play at The Actors Studio. I still remember the scene I would audition with from Joan of Arc."

It was during this time that Ms. Hadden sent a letter to Kim Stanley, another well-respected member of the theatre community. "I had seen her in a play and I was so moved, I wrote her a 'fan' letter," Ms. Hadden admits. Much to her surprise, Ms. Stanley invited her to come backstage. They remained friends for years, Ms. Hadden paying Ms. Stanley a visit five years ago to her home in Santa Fe.

For the last several years, however, Ms. Hadden's primary commitment has been to her art. While her initial style was "primitive," flat and one-dimensional, her approach has evolved to include local scenes like this week's cover of Sag Harbor's Main Street.

Ms. Hadden particularly likes the medium of watercolors. "Once I took a course with Miriam Dougenis in watercolors, I was hooked," she says. "I'm in love with watercolors."

Asked who she may have been influenced by since she wasn't formally trained as an artist, Ms. Hadden doesn't hesitate to answer. "My very favorite person in the whole world is Georgia O'Keeffe, her spirit, her soul."

"It took a long time to develop my art on my own. But I'm glad I have it. I don't like to ask myself, 'What am I going to do today?' I know I'll be painting."

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Hadden's work can be seen at the Winter Tree Gallery in Sag Harbor.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Now that we are coming to the official end of summer, I reflect on the activities and highlights of the past season. Some of my favorite moments include the privilege of meeting and learning from several exciting chefs who shared their expertise here at East End benefits.

Vincent Scotto, chef/owner of Gonzo restaurant on 13th street in Manhattan, fired up the grill at the July James Beard Foundation Chefs and Champagne benefit at Wolff Estate Vineyard in Sagaponack to offer guests delicious tastings of his specialty grilled pizzas. This was an amazing experience for me, as pizza on the grill is something that would have intimidated me had I not watched Vincent at work. Armed with his basic recipe I proceeded to make the dough, which yielded 6 pieces for small 8-inch pizzas. This may be the secret as the smaller piece is more manageable to handle when tossing it on the grill. I prepared my gas grill with two levels of heat, and, with fingertips, draped the thin dough on the medium-hot side of the grill and waited just a couple of minutes until the edges lightly browned and puffed a bit. I flipped the dough with tongs onto the cooler section and topped it with one of several combinations of ingredients.

To simplify my preparation for the grilled pizza Margherita, I spooned on a thin layer of Lucini's San Marzano jarred plum tomato sauce and topped it with thin slices of mozzarella, and a dusting of grated Romano cheese on the partially grilled crust. Lucini's rustic tomato basil sauce, handcrafted in Italy, is a terrific time-saver. Other toppings included grilled zucchini and eggplant slices, which I prepared ahead, along with a variety of fresh herbs and grated cheeses.

While the menu at Gonzo, which refers to "cool" in Tuscany, features a variety of excellently reviewed trattoria fare, Vincent Scotto, before opening his own restaurant in Greenwich Village, developed his rustic signature pizzas during his sous-chef days with George Germon of Al Forno's in Providence, Rhode Island.

VINCENT SCOTTO'S PIZZA CRUST ON THE GRILL

Cooking pizza on the grill requires two levels of heat, direct and indirect. Cooking on a gas grill will be more manageable for first time pizza grillers.

Makes enough dough for 6 8-inch pizzas

1 1/3 cups lukewarm water, about 90-95 degrees
 1 package active dry yeast
 2 1/2 tablespoons coarse (kosher) salt
 2 1/2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
 2 cups bread flour
 1 1/2 cups unbleached all-purpose flour
 1/4 cup whole wheat flour

1. Pour the water into a large bowl, sprinkle in the yeast and stir gently to mix with a chopstick or thin wooden spoon. Set aside for 5 minutes until yeast mixture bubbles and foams. Add salt and stir to mix.

2. In another bowl, mix the flours until evenly incorporated. Add the combined flours to the yeast mixture and stir until a dough forms and pulls away from the sides of the bowl. Transfer to a lightly floured board and knead the dough for a few minutes. (It isn't necessary to do a lot of kneading.) Roll the dough into a log shape and, with a sharp knife, divide the dough into 6 equal portions. Roll each portion into balls of dough, then roll them over in an oiled baking sheet to coat with the oil. Cover with plastic wrap and a clean kitchen towel, place in a warm place away from drafts. Let rise until doubled in size, about 45 minutes. The dough is ready to grill.

Note: you may store the dough after portioning overnight in the refrigerator covered in a suitable container, such as a Ziploc bag. Oil the dough as above and bring to room temperature for one hour before grilling. I have also frozen the dough, defrosted overnight in the refrigerator, then brought it to room temperature.

For the grill

3. Before you are ready to grill, be sure to start with a clean, well-oiled grill set to the heat required for the recipe. Prepare a gas or charcoal grill with two levels of heat, medium-high and medium-low. Oil a rimless baking sheet. Flatten each ball of dough on the sheet by stretching it about 8 inches and about 1/8 inch thick. Don't worry if you don't achieve a perfect circle; it is more important to maintain uniform thickness. Using your fingertips, gently lift the dough and drape it onto the hot portion of the grill. Within a minute or two, the dough will be slightly puffy and the underside will stiffen slightly with grill marks. Using tongs, immediately flip the crust over to the cooler part of the grill. Brush it with olive oil and proceed with one of the following recipes.

GRILLED PIZZA SANTA MARGHERITA

Adapted from Vincent Scotto's pizza on the grill. Use the best of the best ingredients for great results. Arrange your ingredients on a tray, then proceed to grill the pizza dough.

Recipe makes 2 8-inch pizzas

2 balls pizza dough
 Extra-virgin olive oil
 1/4 cup grated Romano cheese
 1/4 cup grated Fontina cheese
 1/2 cup home made or quality store-bought tomato sauce
 1/4 cup chiffonade of fresh basil

1. Heat a gas or charcoal grill to two levels of heat, medium-high and medium-low. Grill the flattened pizza crusts as in the above recipe on a clean, well-oiled grill, about 2 minutes over medium-high heat. When crusts are slightly puffy and the undersides stiffen slightly, flip crusts to the cooler part of the grill, brush with olive oil. Spread about 1/4 cup cheese over each crust then dollop each with about 4 tablespoons tomato sauce, a sprinkle of basil and drizzle of olive oil. Slide the crusts back to the edge of the hot section of the grill. Rotate them for 3-4 minutes until the bottoms are evenly golden. By this time the cheese should be melted. Slide onto a cutting board, let rest a few minutes then slice through with a pizza cutter for serving.

A TALE OF TWO PIZZAS ON THE GRILL

Fresh herbs season grilled zucchini or eggplant slices to top pizza on the grill. Zucchini and eggplant are seasonally fresh and tender at local farm stands.

This recipe makes 2 - 8-inch pizzas

2 narrow zucchini, trimmed, scrubbed and sliced thin

1 small eggplant, trimmed, scrubbed and sliced thin

1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil
 1/2 cup fresh herb mix, thyme, basil and parsley
 Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
 2 balls of dough for the pizza crust
 1/2 cup home made or quality store-bought tomato sauce

Dried oregano
 Grilled zucchini and eggplant slices
 1/2 cup grated mozzarella
 1/4 grated Parmesan cheese
 Extra-virgin olive oil

1. Dry the zucchini and eggplant slices with paper

The Many Facets of the Hampton Classics, 2005

By Silvia Lehrer

The Hampton Classic is indeed in a class of its own. The many facets of the Classic have been under the exemplary leadership of executive directors Jean Lindgren and Tony Hitchcock for thirty years. Under their tutelage, the Classics has grown from a small horse show at Dune Alpin Farm to one of the country's most prestigious horse shows. During the event, held from August 28 to September 4, Jean and Tony were duly honored for their support and dedication at a special benefit that raised $60,000 for the Equestrian AIDS Foundation and "The Ride for Hope."

Throughout the three decades, the Hampton Classic Horse Show has highlighted prize-winning competitions in jumping. The graceful and gymnastic execution of dressage is another eagerly awaited event. There was simply something for everyone. Equestrian events aside – thousands of kids at Kids' Day at the Classics enjoyed pony rides, a petting zoo and miniature horses in the exhibition tent. The Boutique Garden was a virtual showplace of all manner of design: clothing, jewelry, souvenirs, posters, portraits and so much more.

Author and TV personality George Hirsch celebrated the premier of his nationally syndicated lifestyle television series at a cocktail party at Chalet One at the Hampton Classic. Invited guests were treated to delicious rounds of hors d'oeuvres from Robbins/Wolfe Catering and world class wines from Wolffer Estate Vineyards. George Hirsch Living It Up productions offered a winsome 30-minute cooking segment from George's forthcoming TV series for viewing on the enormous Sentient screen over the Grand Prix Field.

The Loaves & Fishes Cookshop held court under a tent adjacent to the Grand Prix Tent. Here Michael Vignapiano, an instructor at the Loaves & Fishes cooking school, both taught and moderated cooking seminars for the culinary crowd. Under the auspices of Viking and Turbochef, several cooking instructors offered a variety of tasty fare. Celebrity guest David Rosengarten held forth with a Tapas inspired menu serving up gazpacho, shrimp with garlic, Spanish olives, marcona almonds and Manchego cheese in olive oil. David was a big draw and entertaining as usual.

Our local representative, Andrew Engle, executive chef of Laundry in East Hampton, delighted his audience at the cookshop, preparing rare slices of grilled sashimi-quality tuna served with micro radish greens and organic red and yellow watermelon from Satur Farms on the North Fork, in sweet onion vinaigrette. He continued his demonstration with jumbo head-on shrimp grilled to perfection served with a heady sauce of scallions, parsley, thyme, habanera pepper, garlic, lemon juice and olive oil.

Sybille van Kempen, proprietor of the Loaves & Fishes Cookshop, made the engaging and informative culinary programs possible. A schedule of classes at the Cookshop may be found on-line at www.landf-cookshop.com

Culminating the eventful week of the Hampton Classic, legendary rider Joe Fargis thrilled a crowd of 12,000 in the jump-off with his electrifying dash to the finish line to win the $100,000 Prudential Douglas Elliman Real Estate Grand Prix to close the 30th annual Hampton Classic Horse Show.

towels after salting with kosher salt and weighting down to exude bitter juices. Arrange the vegetable slices, one layer deep, on a tray and brush with olive oil. Combine herbs, remaining olive oil and salt and pepper to taste in a mixing bowl and set aside.

2. Preheat grill to medium to grill the vegetables. Arrange vegetable slices, several at a time, over heat and grill until lightly colored on each side, about 2 minutes per side. Transfer to a platter and spoon a thin layer of herb mixture over each vegetable slice.

3. Heat a gas or charcoal grill to two levels of heat, medium-high and medium-low. Grill the flattened pizza crusts as in the above recipe on a clean, well-oiled grill, about 2 minutes over medium-high heat. When crusts are slightly puffy and the undersides stiffen slightly, flip crusts to the cooler part of the grill, brush each with olive oil. Spread about 1/4 cup tomato sauce over each crust and sprinkle with dried oregano. Arrange zucchini on one crust and eggplant on the second crust. Top with a mixture of cheese, equally divided over the vegetables and drizzle with a little olive oil.

4. Slide the crusts back to the edge of the hot section of the grill. Rotate them for 3-4 minutes until the bottoms are evenly golden. If cheese isn't melting, slide over to the cooler side and cover with a tent of foil for a minute or two. Slide onto a cutting board. Let pizzas rest for a couple of minutes then slice through with a pizza cutter for serving.

Solar-Powered Sunflowers

Just as the season begins to wane, just as summer gardens are overtaken by green and the lilacs and violets hibernate until next spring, a sign of autumn with the personality of summer emerges. It's harvest season, and grapes are mature on the vine and pumpkins are popping up, albeit uninvited, at farm stands. And unfolding before delighted eyes are the faces of the summertime encapsulated: sunflowers are in bloom, and even though they're a sure sign of shortening days, they still hold the feeling of summer.

Sunflowers are some of the most commanding flowers, growing to as tall as 15 feet. Just imagine a daisy or a mum with a face the size of a dinner plate and a stalk that could double as a walking stick. Sunflowers are some of the only plants that would actually fit in Alice's Wonderland without steroids. And besides their imposing physique, sunflowers often travel in packs, existing among a sea of their own. Whipping down Montauk Highway at this time of year, you will find armies of these sturdy soldiers with their faces pointed at the sun, following as it makes its way across the sky.

Sunflowers are part of the Helianthus genus, which contains 70-80 species. All of them are native to the United States. These flowers are heliotropic, which means they always orient themselves towards the sun. They grow easily in neutral to slightly alkaline soil, and if your soil is acidic, you can simply add lime to help your sunflowers thrive. Sunflowers do well protecting themselves from intruders in that their roots emanate a chemical that inhibits the growth of other plants.

As their name would imply, sunflowers do best in direct sunlight. There are many varieties of sunflowers, ranging from the Teddy Bear sunflower, which grows to an unassuming three feet, to the Russian Giant, which gets to over 12 feet tall. The average sunflower is around eight feet tall, still big enough to look down at any human being.

These gorgeous plants are one of only four major crops of global importance that are native to the United States. The other three are blueberry, cranberry, and pecan. There is archaeological evidence that Native Americans have been using sunflowers for food and medicine for 8000 years. Sunflower seeds, which are still a popular snack, were roasted and ground into a fine meal and used in baking and to thicken soups. Sunflower oil, which is extracted through boiling, is used as a cooking oil. The sunflower seed is the second most important oil seed, after coconut oil. These seeds contain 35-40% oil, and are high in the healthy fat: polyunsaturated fat. They contain lots of valuable protein. Sunflowers have also been used for a variety of medicinal purposes, from wart removal to sunstroke treatment.

Perhaps the most famous work of Vincent Van Gogh is his series of sunflowers. He captures these striking flowers in each phase of their life cycle, from the vibrant and hopeful to the withered and dying. Van Gogh's career only lasted about nine years, and it began with darker works from his home in the Netherlands. When he moved to France, he started painting his now-immortalized sunflowers. In a letter he wrote to his fellow artist and friend Gauguin, he said that when Gauguin came to visit, he would stay in a room "decorated only with sunflowers."

As is evident from this short synopsis of the significance of sunflowers, they are an incredibly versatile and important crop. And even if you plan to do nothing with them but admire, they are a worthy addition to your home. Now is the time to stop at the farm stand and pick up a bouquet for your dining room table. Unlike many other flower varieties, sunflowers need no baby's breath, no greenery. They need nothing to complement them, because with their strong presence and their vibrant colors, they stand best alone. If you're headed back to the city after a relaxing weekend, bring a splash of country with you. Or if you're going to a dinner party, bring the happiest hostess gift of all. Sunflowers are truly the most summery sign of fall.

Slip Your Sofa Into Some New Skin

I love my cat, really, truly, I do. He's a cute grey tabby cat with sea green eyes and a long, striped tail. His name is Squirm. Yes, Squirm. He was our honeymoon cat. The minute we got off the plane from Hawaii we drove out to the Animal Shelter and brought Squirm home, convinced that he was a "she." (The volunteer was obviously new.) The vet corrected us a week later and by then Squirm was decked in a pink collar with a pink blanket in (his) her carrier. We were convinced that we had traumatized Squirm with that incident and maybe, that's why he took it all out on our couch and love seat and chair, and occasionally, even his scratching post. Our new furniture looks, well how do I say this without sounding too harsh? It looks like something out of a horror movie. The armrests on all aforementioned furniture are pulled and in one poor love seat's case, fully shredded.

We now have a few options. This has happened gradually and over time. So along the way I've been stitching, patching, adding doilies to cover the shredding and cursing A LOT about not getting the cat declawed. Option #1 is buy a whole new set of furniture. Option #2: Reupholster the couch and loveseat or Option #3: slipcovers.

I choose Option #3 – the slipcovers – figuring that in a year or so all the furniture will be replaced and until then we have a cat, dog and toddler, who is often projectile and spilling. Slipcovers are a great temporary option because they can be removed and washed. The good thing is that, upon washing, they do recover shape, look clean and are generally cute in appearance if you can manage to get them on right.

I took a ride to Target to purchase mine. I had priced around and slipcovers are darn pricey, going from $49.99 for a lighter fabric to up to $250 for a heavier fabric. I went somewhere in between and purchased matching "linen" covered canvas slipcovers for both the offending couch and loveseat. The brand name is Simply Shabby Chic and I paid $59.99 for the loveseat and $89.99 for the couch. The picture on the cover looked adorable. A clean couch/loveseat all decked out and shred free with a fireplace burning in the background and a happy family sitting on the clean, linen colored couch. Ah....that was for me.

First, I took out the loveseat slipcover, figuring if I could tackle putting that one on, then the couch would be a cinch. It came out all wrinkled. I smoothed the fabric out and saw that the wrinkles just sort of faded away, so I took that as a good sign. I read the directions on how to put it on and thought

"simple, no problem...I'm good." Think I even threw in a little dance with my son, fully confident that I could get this on. An hour later found me calling my friend, my mom and the company saying "how the heck do you get this thing to fit?" They explained about the art of tucking.

I was instructed to get a spatula or wooden cooking spoon and attack the loveseat with it. Tuck, Tuck Tuck....a few yanks here and there and, hey, it was resembling a loveseat again instead of a blob of fabric. After about another half hour of stabbing the offending furniture with a spatula (my son had the plastic kitchen spoon and was loving doing this) it looked darn good. I flung a few cute little pillows I had bought in matching colors on there and, lo and behold, we looked like the picture! I took an iced tea break and got up the strength to tackle the couch, which, once I knew what I was doing, was MUCH easier.

Yesterday I took a trip to Bed, Bath and Beyond to find a little snazzier slipcover for the loveseat. The linen one just seems too drab to have on both pieces of furniture. I went with the Lara Antique slipcover by Sure Fit. This is a lightly floral fabric blend that went on a lot easier than the previous slipcover (I'm an expert now) and looks really cute. Sure Fit slipcovers stick to their reputation of having a "tighter fit" on the furniture. Less tucking was involved. I paid $119.99 minus 20% (I was armed with a coupon) and am very happy with this purchase. Slipcovers are the reason that Squirm and I are now getting along!

Preserving the Past for the Future

Several years ago, my parents helped my grandmother's childhood friend move from her large house to a smaller apartment. Because of their kindness, she gave them several of her family quilts, which had been passed down through the generations. They weren't in ideal condition, as 120-year-old quilts rarely are. Most had large tears, holes, and various other types of damage to them. We stored them in our basement, which, last year, flooded. Much was ruined, and the quilts were waterlogged and needed a good cleaning.

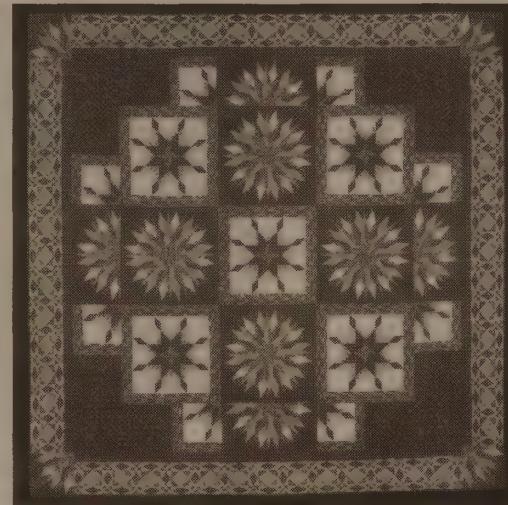

The spinning of the washing machine was the final straw. Even on the gentlest of cycles the pre-existing damage worsened and two quilts seemed anything but salvageable. Not willing to part with them, my mother decided that, although large portions of the quilts were destroyed, there were swatches that could be kept as reminders of what the quilts once looked like. They were to become decoration - framed and mounted on the wall. And so I was put to the task of measuring, cutting and framing the quilts.

We opted for large, 24"x36" frames. We felt that this space was sufficient to capture the essence of the quilt, and because of the damage, was the largest it could be without exposing too much wear and tear. We chose a frame that would work with both the quilt and décor of the room. You can probably go to a framemaker and have them do all the work: the cutting, the mounting, etc., but because it doesn't have to be exact like mat cutting, you can try it at home.

Besides the frame, you will need a box cutter, straight-edge, a marker or pen, and a discerning eye. The most important aspect of framing a quilt is to decide what section of the quilt you would like to save. For us, it was rather easy to do. One of the quilts had a date box-stitched into it. It read, "1889-1899" on a red and white square. It's subtle and, to someone just glancing, they wouldn't have even noticed it. We felt it was important to keep the date, but did not want it to become the focal point of the piece. So we needed to figure out how to lay out the quilt.

The first step is to place the quilt on a flat surface. A wooden floor is ideal. Second, take the frame (remove the glass because it is easier to slide it about) and place it on top of the quilt. Move it until you find the portion you like. We opted to place the frame on a 45-degree angle and we situated the date on the bottom right corner of the frame. In order to have the patch with the date, we also had to incorporate a tattered edge. When I say tattered, I actually mean completely torn and worn out. We felt that this was a good look, and decided we would actually fray the edges of the entire quilt (more on that later).

Once you decide what piece of the quilt you would like to preserve, remove the frame and place the glass on top of the quilt, arranging it over the soon-to-be framed piece. Using a pen or marker, trace the glass onto the quilt. When you remove it, you will have a piece of wood or sheetrock around, use it as a backing when cutting the quilt. Place the quilt on top of the wood and use a straight edge (a 2x4 works fine) and make several passes over the quilt. Depending on the thickness of the quilt and the age of the fabric, it may take four or five passes to cut completely through the quilt. Once all four sides are cut, you can place it in the frame.

As I mentioned earlier, we decided to fray the edges. I haphazardly scored them with the box-cutter. Once the edges were cut, I tore them by hand, allowing the inside stuffing to be exposed as well as the backside of the quilt.

To frame it, I drilled small holes at the top of the frame's backing, then positioned the quilt in the center and sewed it to the back using thread that matched the quilt.

The final part is to hang the quilt on the wall in a place of honor, somewhere where it will be both decoration and a reminder of the past. You can also do this with new, store-bought quilts to give your home an older, antique feel.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Planning A Spring with Daffodils

The time between September and November is ideal for planting spring bulbs. At Rock Cottage, we have found no bulb more resilient or well-suited to East End gardens than the daffodil. Daffodils are one of the easiest bulbs to grow and, because they are not eaten by deer, an excellent choice.

Daffodils come in early, mid-season, and late blooming varieties, and naturalize easily. They produce the best and longest display when some of each blooming variety are planted together. They are best suited to mass planting where residual foliage can mature and dieback so the bulbs can produce flowers next season.

All daffodils come from a classification of plants known as Liliopsida. They are in the family known as Liliaceae that includes other types of lilies. All daffodils, regardless of the common name given are in a genus of plants known as Narcissus. That said, all Narcissus may not be classified as daffodils, those known as "jonquils," coming from the Spanish word for flower, are included.

Few individuals can resist the lovely fragrance the flowers produce, though some are allergic to the calcium oxalate the cut stalks exude (this is also the reason deer do not like them). Daffodils have been designated to signify chivalry and respect, and were selected as the national flower of Wales. Few people can resist the lovely fragrance they produce.

Daffodils are typically large-flowered. They come in yellow, white, orange, pink, lime-green, and combinations thereof. The newer hybrids may also have cups in reds and browns. In temperate climates, daffodils are among the earliest flowers to bloom in spring.

All daffodils have a central trumpet "corona" surrounded by petals. Traditional daffodils are yellow, but many feature other colors. Breeders have developed daffodils with double or triple rows of petals, many with frilled or reticulated petals and either elongated or compressed central cups.

Daffodils are classified into thirteen plant divisions. Divisions include Trumpets with long coronas; Long- and short-cupped flowers; Triandrus with more than one nodding flower per stem; Cyclamineus with very straight and narrow coronas; Jonquilla with several flower heads per stem; Tazetta with three to twenty small, short-cupped flowers per stem; Poeticus where the petals are stained with the color of the corona and have small, flat-cupped coronas edged in red; Bulbocodium hybrids where the flowers resemble a "hooped petticoat;" Split corona where the corona is split; Other Cultivars that include those flowers not falling into other categories, and the Species daffodils that include the wild forms.

To grow daffodils, select a well-drained, sunny spot. Hillsides, slopes, and raised beds work the best since drainage is important. Prepare the soil to a depth of about 10 inches deep. If dealing with clay or sandy soil, improve it with well-rotted compost, soil additives, and peat. Daffodils grow best in slightly acidic soil so adding garden sulfur helps if soil is alkaline.

Use top-quality bulbs and plant them so the tops (pointed end) are about two times as deep as the height of the bulb. You do not have to be exact, as the bulbs will adjust themselves over the seasons. If planting bulbs in sandy soil, plant them a little deeper. Many like to add bulb fertilizer at the time of planting. We do not believe this makes much difference if the soil is improved before planting. Be sure to avoid the use of bone meal – as it attracts foraging animals who will dig up the bulbs.

In the spring, as bulbs begin to emerge, top-dress them with a fertilizer rated as 5-10-10. After flowers emerge, another topping of low-nitrogen fertilizer is helpful.

Daffodils require lots of water to grow. Water immediately after planting; keep moist until the soil freezes. During blooming, keep the bulbs well watered until three weeks after they bloom. Then, stop watering.

Deadhead any developing seeds to conserve bulb energy and promote next year's blooms. Daffodils make their next year's blooms after flowering, so it is important to leave the foliage to invigorate the bulb and spark flower generation. Never cut the foliage until it begins to yellow (usually mid-June).

Daffodils continue to bloom for three to five years without disturbance. At that time, it is helpful to dig and divide the bulbs and replant them at an appropriate level. If you find that your bulbs do not bloom after the first year, move them to a different location.

While there is some effort involved in planting daffodils, there is no better flower to welcome spring. Surprise yourself next year – plant some bulbs now!

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

As we move into autumn many visitors will return to their New York apartments, which have increased in value as they sat on the beaches here this summer. Halstead, a leading New York Realtor, reports that city apartment prices have nearly doubled in just one year. Halstead says that the average apartment in the month of August sold at $1,145,865, that is 14% higher than this time last year. The average apartment, just twelve short months ago, was selling at approximately $725,000.

Realtors out East expect to stay busy this fall after a block-busting summer. Hamptons Realty Group, which has offices from Hampton Bays to Amagansett, says that the market's progression will depend on interest rates remaining low. Investors, says HRG, will continue to buy real estate as an alternative to the stock market. Inventory is beginning to build and the group of realtors agree that the market will remain strong for quite some time to come. Htun Han, principal broker in the Amagansett office, says that he watched the inventory heavily increase from mid-August and does not believe that there will be a lasting glut of listings staying too long on the market. "As always, homes priced right for the market conditions at the moment will sell very quickly." J.R. Sawicki, principal broker of the Water Mill office, says, "The Hamptons market relies heavily on supply and demand." And here, demand still outweighs the supply.

Orient Point, courtesy of Prudential Douglas Elliman, Southold. Mr. Sawicki says that there continues to be a high demand for homes that is relative to the inventory.

Pat O'Donoghue in Southampton says that smart buyers are flocking to Flanders where he believes its new-found popularity is making for an up and coming area. With news of revitalization projects proposed in both Riverhead and Flanders the Hampton Bays office has been extremely busy.

Rentals took on a new trend this past summer where most East End brokers found that short term rentals seem to be becoming the norm rather than the traditional Memorial Day to Labor Day. Renters now are renting by the month and sometimes by the week during the summer months. Year round rentals are becoming more commonplace as parts of the Hamptons stay lively all year round. Renters are now using their rental homes to enjoy the change of seasons as well as the holidays. "Memorial Day to Labor Day seems like a thing of the past," says Stan Esposito in East Hampton, who believes the Hamptons is a year-round resort now.

Currently for sale in Bridgehampton is an estate called Goose Watch Farm on 30 acres, valued at $20 million. The traditional home is situated high on Water Mill Ridge and has Bridgehampton Farm and ocean views. The 7 bedroom, 7 bath, home is 10,000 sq ft and is reminiscent of the traditional hunting lodges of Europe with high beamed ceilings and four stone fireplaces. The pool is set in a pond-like setting. It is listed with Harris Brown Stevens in East Hampton.

On the North Fork there is an exceptional piece of real estate that just sold in Orient. The Hicks House is one of the last properties of its kind on the North Fork and is bordered by an oyster farm and estuary. The home is more than 100 years old and is surrounded by some of the last unspoiled acreage on the North Fork. The sale was brokered by land and waterfront specialist Enzo Morobito of Prudential Douglas Elliman in Southold.

Police Blotter

Wardrobe Wars

The owner of Blue & Cream was horrified to find eggs and mustard splattered across the high-end boutique's front and side windows when she arrived at the store on Sunday morning. It is unclear whether the attack came from one of the competing stores in East Hampton or an unhappy customer who found the store's centerpiece Tiffany Edition Nike sneakers cheaper on eBay. Police can't come up with a single theory as to who might have thrown the eggs and scoop of mustard on the windows.

Party Pooper

There is nothing that ruins the party-hearty atmosphere like fights and death threats. A Sag Harbor man not even invited to the soirée went to pick his wife up at the Huntington Crossway party when a highly intoxicated guy with serious liquid courage stumbled up to the car and told the hapless husband he was going to kill him. Without further ado, the drunkard proceeded to smash a beer bottle over the victim's head and dive at him. The innocent bystander did the only logical thing ..... he grabbed an iron pipe that happened to be lying on the ground next to him, and swung at the man's legs. Although no arrests were made, the whole situation was even more hectic because it was in the middle of the afternoon!

* * *

Call of the Wild

A woman was taking a leisurely stroll through Agawam Park when she saw the worst side of the mammalian species homo erectus. The 28-year-old specimen was mingling with the animals of the forest, naked. The woman complained to police who arrested the confused woodsman and charged him with public lewdness and disorderly conduct.

* * *

The Mischief with Manners

The last thing an Amagansett man expected when he spotted a burglar prying open a screen door in his bedroom was for the young man to apologize and then leave. After yelling at the would-be thief, the thoughtful felon said, "I'm sorry" before pedaling away for a fast getaway on his bicycle. No arrests were made.

Last Call for Alcohol

Sometimes things get weird when the last bottle of booze runs dry. In the case of two men drinking the night away in Springs, things almost got homicidal. A resident of Springs-Fireplace Road was scared stiff when his drinking buddy became aggressive and picked up a brick and a six-inch kitchen knife. The dual weapon-wielding friend fled the scene before police arrived. It just goes to show that you can never be too selective when choosing drinking partners.

Honey, I Locked in the Kid!

What's worse than locking your keys in the car? Locking your keys in the car along with your two-year-old child. Not wanting to report back to the Mrs. without his baby or car, the resident of Egypt Lane in East Hampton called police. Several tries with a "slim Jim" failed to unlock the car door, so they eventually had to apply a "center punch" to the rear passenger side window to get in the car. It is uncertain what the child's level of communication skills was, and whether or not he was able to tell his mother how uncomfortable it was being locked in the car after daddy left the keys in the car.

CLARIFYING A POINT

Dear Dan,

In response to Joan Zandell's story The Naked Man in the Fog With a Bag Over His Head:

I can understand why the story of Mr. John Jario Giraldo can create curiosity. On the other hand, it seems somewhat misguided to sympathize with such a brutal offender. In the article you accurately described the planning and brutality involved in each sexual assault yet minimized the attacks by stating "but invariably (he) failed to rape her." By minimizing the attacks of sexual assault the victims are, in a sense, violated again as statements like this can be interpreted leading one to believe that it wasn't so bad.

Whether or not a man fails to complete the act of rape a brutal assault is a brutal assault. As you indicated in your article, crimes of this nature are, indeed, unsettling. The question of why men behave this way for the most part has been answered. We already know that rape and sexual assault has to do with gaining power and control over another individual. How easy it seems to provide a psychological diagnosis when it is often counter-indicated.

We can agree that visiting an inmate in jail is uncomfortable and can be disturbing. The fact that they are there for committing criminal offenses should speak to the reason for all of the safety precautions. It seems to me that the inmates in Riverhead Jail are more fortunate than others in that they have the ability to touch their visitors. It is my belief that the question of "why" is better suited to why inmates have physical contact with visitors rather than what got them incarcerated in the first place.

You pointed out that Mr. Giraldo's hands appeared so small and alluded to the fact that he was not an intimidating looking man. I wonder how big his hands seemed to be to the women he attacked from behind. I wonder if they felt small when the women he attacked were trying to breath while he was pounding their heads into the sand. I imagine they did not feel small at all and I imagine that no matter his stature he felt awfully heavy and large. It is also curious how Mr. Giraldo knew to let you know he had a "psychological problem" after his capture and did not seek help for such a problem before he hurt all of those women.

I think what is most curious is that you felt an "overwhelming sadness" for what you saw (Mr. Giraldo) and for his victims. I wonder if it occurred to you that Mr. Giraldo had a choice and his victims did not. I wonder if it occurred to you that maybe Mr. Giraldo simply wanted to satisfy himself by exerting undue force on unsuspecting women - strangers who were only out enjoying the day. I wonder if Mr. Giraldo's victims felt or continue to feel an overwhelming sense of sadness?

Though you noted that Dr. Daniel Becker has never met or treated Mr. Giraldo the notion of paraphilia being a reason for such attacks seems to me to be a stretch if not somewhat irresponsible. I would like to note that the definition of rape you provided can be considered accurate however simplistic. You neglected to discuss the trauma of sexual assault that is often defined as forced offensive sexual contact with another person, exclusive of rape. Each of Mr. Giraldo's victims and their families has suffered at the choices of Mr. Giraldo.

You may ask how do we know this? I can simply tell you that some of Mr. Giraldo's victims as well as victims of other sexual assault contacted us, the Retreat and voiced unanimous concern that there should be no sadness for Mr. Giraldo when you consider the total chaos he chose to create in the lives of his victims, their families, and the community at large.

The Chief

There once was a chief
Who wanted to help bring relief
To those who were caught in a storm
He was moved beyond all human reason
And although it was the end of the season
He was more than willing to knock on every door
He just couldn't stand to see his fellow man suffer any more
He called a friend
To see if he would lend
A trailer to help clothe and feed the poor
Before he knew it
His friend got to it
And a huge trailer was parked outside his station's door
He filled it to the brim
With donations given to him
By people who really cared
It took a chief help bring relief
To those who were caught in a storm

-Richard Sawyer
(In praise of the Chief of Police of Sag Harbor)

Finally, we would like you and the community to know that there is help for your readers who are either victims of rape and sexual assault or family members of a victim. Retreat, Inc. can help. The Retreat provides counseling and advocacy services to individuals and their families living in the five East End towns including Riverhead, Southold, Southampton, East Hampton and Shelter Island who have experienced the terror of rape and sexual assault.

TIME TO HELP

Dear Dan, Dear Friends,

You CAN help. MoveOn.org just launched a website, www.hurricanehousing.org, to connect your empty beds with hurricane victims who desperately need a place to wait out the storm. You can post your offer of housing (a spare room, extra bed, and even a decent couch) on www.hurricanehousing.org or search there for housing if you need it.

MoveOn will pass requests from hurricane victims or relief agencies on to volunteer hosts, who can decide whether or not to respond to a particular request. The host remains anonymous until they reply to someone looking for housing. Housing is most urgently needed within reasonable driving distance (about 300 miles) of the affected areas, especially New Orleans.

I live in a very small one-bedroom apartment in a carriage house way out in Long Island. It is a place I'm not sure anyone would even want to come to, but I didn't hesitate for a moment to post an offer to open my home and help someone in need - for as long as they need it.

I cannot imagine the terror, loss, and devastation that some of these people feel and have gone through. The words of Emily Dickinson come to my mind instantly: "If I can stop one heart from breaking, I shall not live in vain." I hope you will open your hearts and help too, and pass this on to those who could do so as well. These people have lost everything; we have so much to give, our compassion most of all.

All my best.
Cindi Cook

THE GREAT OUTDOORS

Dear Dan,

I enjoy your paper weekly. I've read with interest your view regarding driving on the beach. My family has been out here for twenty-two years. We have a home near the end of Marine Boulevard in Amagansett. I have no favorite place on earth that I'd rather be. Unfortunately for those of us who frequent this particular beach, we are met each weekend with a parking lot stretched in front of us. Our beautiful beach isn't so beautiful during the summer. Lines of cars wait at the end of Marine Boulevard to access the beach. It's no fun to be enjoying a gorgeous day with your family and have trucks pull up right next to you so that instead of looking at the Atlantic Ocean you're looking at the cab of a pickup or SUV. It is not fair to the residents of this area. I believe the beach belongs to everybody but I don't believe the trustees have the right to allow one beach to look like the parking lot of the IGA every weekend.

It's time the town considers a solution to this very serious problem. There's no way this is good for the environment. Aren't we supposed to protect the dunes? The season is over now but I'll write again next year and maybe if you took a ride out this way some weekend in July or August you would understand the frustration of my neighbors and myself.

As for dogs on the beach, I love them as long as owners clean up after them.

Happy fall!

Patricia Comcia

GERONIMO!

Dear Dan,

I have been a reader of your paper for many years and would like to commend you on your "new" writer, Tom Sarc.

Mr. Sarc has a down-to-earth writing style and his topics so far have been very interesting. I particularly like the one about the skydiving!

Keep up the good work.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpected motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an elliptical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Simply call 1-877-794-5363 to request this informative free report.
